ENCYCLOPAEDIA OF TANTRA

Volumen I

SADHU SANTIDEVA

encyclopaedia of TANTRA

SADHU SANTIDEV

VOLUME 1

Allrights reserved Nopartofthispublication may be reproduced or stored in retrival system, or transmitted in any form or by any means without the priorpermission of Cosmo Publications.

© Cosmo Publications First Published 1999

ISBN 81-7020-863-7 (set) 81-7020-864-5 (volume 1)

Published by

MRS. RANI KAPOOR for COSMO PUBLICATIONS Div.of GENESIS PUBLISHING PVT. LTD. 24 B,AnsariRoad, Darya Ganj, New Delhi-110002. INDIA

Typeset at Cosmo Publications

Printed at Mehra Offset Press

CONTENTS

1

1. Meaning of Tantra

_	Classification of Tantras
_	Antiquity and continuity of Tantra
_	Original Home ofTantra
_	Contents of Tantra
_	Human Body, A Microcosm
	Kosa
	Nadis
	Sahasrara Padma
_	Human Nature
_	— Sadhana-Pancatattva
	Kundalini-Yoga
	Puja
	Siddhi
	Purascarana
	Yoga
	Kaya {or Deha)—Siddhi
2. Nature of Ta	ntric Doctrines	31
_	Theory of Creation—Siva, Sakti
_	Tantra and Sakta Works
_	Dasamahavidya
	Acara
	Guru, Sisya, Diksa, Abhiseka

	Mudra, Mandala, Yantra, N	yasa
	— Sava-Sadhana
	Cakrapuja Ways to Liberation Bhakti in Tantra Yuganaddha Number of Tantras Sakta Sect—a general view Science in Tantra Causes of Composition of T Literary Value of Tantra Tantra beyond India Tantra and Timaeus Tantra and Christianity Tantra and Jews	antras
	Was Tantra of Foreign Origin
3.	Vedic Origin of Tantric Practices	85
4.	What is Siva Linga ?	101
5-	Tantric Practice with Makaras	11 y
6.	Gradations of Approaching the Divine	133
	 — Gradations of Approach Guru (II) Guru (III) Guru (IV) Guru (V) Guru (VI) Guru (VII) Guru (VIII) — Guru and God — Guru and Parents — Guru'sWord
	— Here

Holy Company

Holy Men (I) Holy Men (II)

Human Birth (I)

Human Birth (II)

Images

Immediate

Inner And Outer (I)

Inner And Outer (II)

Inner Truth

Intellectual Knowledge (I)
Intellectual Knowledge (II)

Japa (I)

Japa (II)

Japa (III)

Japa (IV)

Japa And Dhyana

Japa And Stotra

Jiva And Shiva

Just Use

Karma

Kaula (I)

Kauia (II)

Self-Revealing Shiva-Shakti

Sins Of The Disciple

Supreme Truth

supreme mum

Tantra Sadhana (I)

Tantra Sadhana (II)

Tantra Sadhana (III) Tantra Sadhana (IV)

Upasana

Upasana Gradations

Veda

Veda And Tantra

Verbal Knowledge

Wine

Worship (I)

Worship (II)

Worship (III)

Worship (IV)

Worship (V)

Worship (V!)

Yantra

Yantra And Mantra

Yoga

Yogin (I)

Glossary or Tantric Terminology 195

Chapter-1
Meaning of Tantra

Chapter-1

Among the various meanings of 'Tantra', found in lexicons the following may be noted: siddhánta (conclusion), srutisákhá (a branch of sruti, i.e., Vedas), itikartavyatá (set of duties), prbbandha (composition), sástravisesa (a particular sástra).

'Tantra' is sometimes used to denote governance. Kálidása uses the expression 'prajah tantrayiva' (having governed the subjects) in the Abhinanasakuntalam (V. 5).

In the Vedas (e.g., Rgveda X. 71.9, Atharvaveda X. 7.42) 'tantra' appears to be used to denote a weaving machine, a loom. The same sense of the word is found also in the Taittiriya Bráhmana (11.5.5.3). The word tantraka occurs in the Astádhyáyi as a derivative of the tantra, and means a cloth taken from the loom.

In the Satapatha Bráhmana and Tándya Bráhmana, 'tantra' denotes the chief portion or the essence of a thing. Perhaps, in that age, Tantra was considered to represent the quintessence of Sastras.

The term tantra' has been used at several places to denote a system of thought, a set of doctrines, etc., e.g., Kapilasya Tantra (i.e., Sámkhya), used by Samkara. The word 'tantra' is used by Bhaskara Raya to denote Mimámsá-sástra, etc.

Tantra, when denoting a kind of Sástra, stands for a set of doctrines, practices, mystic syllables, metaphysical speculations, magic, etc.

'Tantra' is derived from the root tan to spread. Tanyate vistaryáte jnáñam anena — knowledge is increased by it. In this sense, any branch of knowledge is called Tantra, e.g., Sámkhya and Nyáya philosophical systems are called respectively Kapila-tantra, Gotama-tantra. The Ayurvedic work, attributed to Agnivesa, is called Agnivesa-tantra. 'Tantra', derived from the same root, is taken by some to denote a Sástra which dilates upon tattvas and mantras.

According to H. P. Sástrì, Tantra means shortening. It attempts to reduce, to something like algebraic forms, mantras which would otherwise be very long.

Some derive Tantra from tanu (body). Tantra is so called as it saves the body by Yogic practices.

Other derive that word from root trai (to save), and take tantra to denote that Sastra which gives protection to its followers.

Another way of deriving 'Tantra' is from the root tantri (to explain) or tatri (to understand). In the İsánagurudeva-paddhati, Tantra is taken to denote the Sástra which expounds the six categories of Saivism, viz., Pasu, Pása, Pati, Sakti, Vicára, Kriyácára.

Classification of Tantras

Tantras are classified in various ways. The Tántric works of the Vaisnavas, Saivas and Sáktas are called respectively Samhitá, Àgama and Tantra; these terms mean respectively collection, tradition and a set of doctrines or a book. In some cases, these terms are used promiscuously.

Tantric works are also classified as Agama and Nigama. The works, in which Parvati asks questions like a pupil, and Siva answers like a teacher, are called Agama. Those, in which the process is reversed, are designated as Nigama.

Tantras are again classified as Visnuakránta, Rathakránta and Asvakránta or Gajakranta in accordance with the places of their origin.

Sixty-four Tantras are believed to belong to each of these regions.2

According to tradition, Tantras are divided into two categories. viz. — Sadágama and Asadagama. There is difference of opinion about which of the works are Sat and which Asat. The main criterion is that when the objective is worship in conformity with practice or custom, the work concerned is Sat; otherwise a work is Asat.

Tantras are also classified as Astika (Vedic) and Nástika (non-Vedic). The works of the former class are divided, according to the predominance of the deity, as Sákta. Saiva, Saura, Gánapatya and Vaisnava.

The Sákta Tantras are divided into ten classes in accordance with the names of ten Mahávidyás. Of these, the Sodasi-tantra is known as *Srividy*á.

Another mode of classification is into Srotas, Pitha and Armáya.3

Tantras are also classified into Kádi, Hádi and Kahádi or Sadi*. This classification appears to have been in accordance with the initial letters of mantras. The mantra having Ka as the initial syllable is Kádi, that with Ha as the initial letter is Hádi, and that beginning with the union of Kádi and Hádi is Kahádi.

Sakti is supposed to be inherent in Siva as the property of burning inheres in fire.

The following five faces of Siva are taken as representing the five functions of Sakti, in the spheres noted against them:

Isána — Cit (consciousness),
Tatpurusa — Ànanda (bliss), Sadyojyoti — Icchá (will),

Vámadeva — Jñána (knowledge),

Aghora - Kriyá (action).

The five mouths of Siva are said to have originally produced ten Agamas, viz., Kámika, Yogaja, Cintya, Mukuta, Amsumán, Dipta, Ajita, Súksma, Sahasra, Suprabheda.

These, in their turn, led to the composition of the following eighteen Raudra Agamas:

Vijaya, Nihsvasa (or, Prodgita) Paramesvara, Mukhabimba, Siddha, Santana, Narasimha, Candramsu, (or, Candrahasa).

Virabhadra (or, Bhadra), Agneya, Svayambhu, Visara (or, Virakta), Raurava (or, Rauravya), Vimala (or, Mukuta), Kirana, Lalita, Saumeya (or, Para).

The above two classes together constitute the twenty-eight Saiva Agamas.

Another tradition makes the Daksina Mukha of Siva represent non-duality; it is called Yogini-vaktra. The other four faces are stated to represent the four conditions, viz., Denotative, Denoted, Extinguishing and Extinguished. The works, produced by these, together constitute the 64 Bhairava Agamas classified into the following octads:

Bhairavástaka:

Svacchanda, Bhairava, Canda, Krodha, Unmatta, Asitáñga, Mahocchúsma, Kankálisa.

Yámalástaka :

Brahmá, Visnu, Atharvan, Ruru, Vetála, Indra, Svacchanda.

Again, Tantras are divided into Hindu and non-Hindu. Those of the latter class are Buddhist and Jaina. Buddhist Tantras are divided, according to the three broad divisions of later Buddhism, as vajrayána, Sahajayána and Kálacakryána. There is a sectarian classification of Jaina Tantras too. Both Buddhist and Jaina Tantras belong to the Nástika class, mentioned above.

A mode of classification is based on the mythological ages; e.g., varahakalpa, Kálakalpa, etc.

The Váráhitantra mentions a class of works called Upatantra. There is a tradition (e.g., Brahmayamala, Ch. XXXIX Srotonirnaya Section) of classifying Tantric works as Daksina, Váma and Madhyama, also called Divya, Kaula, and Vama, each being sub-divided as Harda (inner) and Báhya (outer).

A division into Astaka, Mañgala, Cakra and Sikhá is also found (Jayadratha-Yámala, 1.47).

A class of Tantras is called Yámala. Besides the well-known *Rudray*á*m*a*la*, there are Yámalas associated with Ganesa. Visnu, Sakti and several others.

In another way, Tantras are divided into two classes, viz... Kálikula and Srikula.

Some divide Tantric works into the following four broad classes:

A. Àgama

Narrator Siva, listener Párvati, approved by Vásudeva. Its contents are usually as follows:- Srsti, Pralaya, Devárcaná, Purascanrana, Satkarma, Dhyánayoga.

B. Dámara

Narrated by Siva. Six kinds of Dámara are Yoga, Siva, Durgá, Sarasvatá, Brahmá, Gandharava.

C. Yamala (lit. meaning pair, couple)

Six, viz, Brahmā, Visnu, Rudra, Ganesa, Ravi, Aditya.

General contents : Jyotisa, Akhyana, Nitya Karma, Kramasútra, Varnabheda, Jatibheda, Yugadharma.

D. Tantra

Sáktas'astra. Also called Nigama, Rahasya, Samhitá, Arnava, etc. General Contents: Sarga, Pratisarga, Devatá-samsthána, Tirthavarnana, As'rama-dharma, Yantra-nirnaya, Jyotis, Puránákhyána, Kosa-varnana, Vratavivarana, Saucas'auca, Naraka, Stri-purusalaksana, Rajadharma, Dana, Yugadharma, etc.

Sáktatantras are by far the most well-known.

Antiquity and continuity of Tantra

lt is not known precisely when Tantra originated. It is given the status of Sruti in some works. It is stated by Hárita, as quoted in Kallúkabhatta's commentary on Manu (ii. I), as follows:

Srutisca dvividhá prokta valdiki tantriki tathá.

The earliest record of Tántric elements is the Atharvaveda. In this Veda, we find, inter alia, á*bhicárika* practices designed to cause mischief to others. There are other elements of white and black magic. These foreshadow the Tantras.

The mystic sound phat, so familiar in Tantra, occur in the Vájasaneyì Samhita. In the Àpastamba Srautasútra, phat is used in offering Soma stalks in abhicára.

The number of extant Tantras is large. It may be presumed that several centuries elapsed before the Tantras grew into a huge bulk.

Manuscripts of some Tantras reveal palaography of the Gupta Age.⁵ The oldest of them is the Kubjikámata preserved in Asiatic Society, Calcutta. The South Indian Saiva Àgamas are mentioned in an inscription of Rájasimhavarman, dating back to the sixth century A.D. in Kailásanátha Temple.

At least four Tantras, viz., Sirascheda, Vinásikha, Sammoha and Nayottara are known from the inscription of Sdok-kak-Thom, to have been introduced into Kambuja (Cambodia) about 800 A.D. by a Brahmin.

The oldest Buddhist Dhárants of Tántric character may, perhaps, be supposed to date from the 4th century A.D.

Tibetan translation only is available of the Buddhist Tántric works by several Bengali scholars including Sántaraksita (705-762 A.D.) and Atisa Dipamkara who are known to have settled in Tibet.

The earliest Nepalese manuscripts of Tantras appear to have been copied between the seventh and the ninth centuries. The later portions of the Mahábhárata, though referring to Itihása, Purána, are silent about Tantra. None of the well-known Chinese travellers, Fa-hien (401-410), Hiuen Tsang (630-643) and Itsing (675), refers to Tantra.

G. Tucci thinks that Tantras hark back to the times of Harivarman and Asanga (4th. cent. A.D.). His opinion is based on the fact that they allude to a Somasiddhánta which he identifies with the Tántric sect of the Kápálíkas. Winternitz, however, does not accept Tucci's view. No Buddhist Tantra appears to have existed before 650 A.D.?

The first clear reference to Tántric literature appears to occur in the Bhágavata-purána (not later than 800 A.D., according to some). These reasons led some scholars to conclude that Tantra did not originate probably earlier than the fifth or sixth century A.D. It may be pointed out that the Devipurána, a Bengal work of about the seventh century A.D., reveals deep influence of Tantra.

Those, who advocate a high antiquity of Tantra, hold that, in the stanzas of the Devisúkta (Rgveda x. 125) there are covert references to Durgádevì who represents the earlier form of Sakti or Kálì, the principal goddess of Tantra. It is also pointed out that the Ratrisukta (Rgveda x. 127) refers to Durgá. Some think that Rátri is the precursor of Kali. According to others, this Súkta is a supplement (Khila)interpolated into the Rgveda.

It is also pointed out that the Márkandeya and Lingapuanas reveal Tántric influence. The oldest part of the former, according to Pargiter, may date back to the third century B.C. or even earlier.

Samkarácárya (C. 8th cent.) has accepted Tantra as authoritative in his Anandalahari and Sáktámoda. The six Cakras of Tantra have been mentioned by him in his Sárirakabhásya.

The works of Bánabhatta (7th cent.) and Bhavabhúti (C. 7th or 8th cent.) refer to Tantric views and practices⁸.

It was pointed out by Joges Vidyanidhi that the names Bráhmi and Devanágari, applied to Indian alphabet, betray Tántric influence. Bráhmi is one of the Mátrkás of Tantra. He thinks that, in ancient times, there was the practice of worshipping painted symbols of the goddess. One such symbol was Devanagara (abode of god) from which Devanagari script was so called.

In the Yasatilaka-campú (Àsvása V) Bhása, who flourished earlier than Kálidásá, is stated to have said, with the Tántric Vámácára in view, that one should drink sura and put on grotesque dress.

The Lalitavistara of about the first century A.D. appears to refer to Tántric elements.

Among the relics of Indus Valley Civilisation, there are terracotta figures of mátrkás and male figures in a sitting posture. Some scholars think that, even in those pre-Vedic times, Durgá as Mother of the universe and Siva as Father used to be worshipped. Thus, the germ of Tantra was there.

B. Foote claims to have found phalli among the neolithic remains discovered by him in Deccan⁹.

The Gangadhara Stone Inscription (424 A.D.) of Visvavarman mentions Matrs or Mother goddesses and Tantra.

The *Brhatsamhit*á (57, 56) of varáhamihira (C. 475-550 A.D.) mentions the group of Mátrs.

The Visnupurána, one of the earliest of the extant Puránas, speaks of the Sakti of Visnu. It mentions several names of Durgá, and states that, if worshipped with wine, flesh, etc., She fulfils all desires.

Whatever the date of origin of Tantra may have been, it appears from spigraphical and literary evidences that Tantric practices prevailed widely long before the sixth century A.D. It is not unreasonable to suppose that centuries elasped between the period of origin of Tantric ideas and their codification and eventual elaboration. Abundant evidence is available to prove that Tantra reached the zenith of popularity in the period between the seventh and the twelfth century A.D.

Winternitz¹⁰ concludes that no real Tantra can be proved to have existed before the 7th century A.D. He is of the opinion that neither the Suvarnaprabhása nor the Mahámáyúri is a true Tantra. He comes to the conclusion that Tántric elements occur in earlier works.

The main arguments, put forward to establish a late origin of Tantra, are as follows:

- (i) Tantra, as a Sástra, has not been mentioned in the famous lexicon, Námaliñganusásana or Amarakosa.
- (ii) The Sútasamhitá (multi-khanda) states that the customs of Pañcarátra, etc., will be beneficial to those who are fallen from the Vedic way of life. This indicates that Tantra arose long after the Veda when Vedic authority was on the wane.
- (iii) The Nátyasástra, which, in its present form, is generally supposed to have originated about the fifth century A.D. does not mention Nádi, Cakra or Náda arising from them; this tends to prove that either Tantra did not exist before this work or was not yet established as authoritative. Ever since its inception, the Tántric faith has inspired to composition of Tántric works in some form or other; it will be evident from the chapter describing the contents of the works on Tantra. The flow of Tántric writings continued right down to the 19th. century.

In conclusion, we can say that though Tántric works appear to have come into being pretty long after Christ, Tántric beliefs and practices were part of the lives of a section of the Indian population as early as the Vedic times and even earlier.

Some scholars have pointed out that the relics of the Indus Valley Civilisation (C. 3000 B.C.) contain Mátrká-múrtis. They hold that yantras, mudrás (finger-pose), the mystic monosyllabic Bijas like KLIM, KRIM, etc., testify to the primitive pictorial writing and language consisting of single sounds. The black rites of Tantra have parallel practices in primitive times.

It seems that Tantracára or Tántric practices, which form a bulk of Tantra literature, were derived from very early times. With the progress of civilisation, sophisticated philosophical speculations got into this literature. That is why we find a curious mixture of profound philosophy with the wildest superstitions and most confused occultism, of a faultless social code of morality and rigid asceticism and a cult disfigured by wild orgies inculcating extremely reprehensible morals¹¹.

Original Home of Tantra

Nothing definite is known about the region where Tantra originated. Some believe that Tantras of the Àgama class originated in Kashmir. What is known as Tantra may have been produced, for the first time, in Bengal. This opinion is shared by Winternitz. An evidence, though not conclusive, in support of the above hypothesis is that manuscripts of Àgamas, written in Sáradá script, abound in Kashmir, and those of the Tantra class, in Bengali script, are available in abundance in Bengal. The works of the Samhita class are believed to have originated in different parts of India, particularly in Deccan and Bengal.

Kámákhyá¹², in Assam, is a stronghold of Tantra. It is known that Sáktism was preached there by the Bengali Sákta. Krsnaráma Nyáyavágisa. The Ahom king, Rudrasimha, became his disciple.

The Bengali Tántriks carried Tantra to the far-off Himláj in Baluchistan; the Bengali Brahmánanda and his disciple Jñánánada preached Tántric philosophy and Sádhaná there.

Tántric Sádhaná in Nepal appears to have been influenced by Bengali Sádhakas¹³.

Tántricism in China and Tibet is believed to have owed its origin to spread of Buddhism from Bengal. Atisa Dipamkara (980-1053 A.D.) and several other scholars from Bengal went over to Tibet, settled there and wrote on Tantra.

In support of the Bengal origin of Tantra, a further evidence, pointed out by some, is that the Mahanirvána-tantra mentions (vi. 7.3.) three kinds of fish for use in rituals; these are found in plenty and widely consumed in Bengal¹⁴.

An anonymous verse states that this Sástra, having originated in Gauda, developed in Mithilá, existed at some places of Maharastra and was destroyed in Gujarat. Gaude pracaritá vidyá maithilaih prabalikrta/kvacit kvacin maharastre gurjare pralayam gatla/

The Bengal work, Pránatosini quotes the Varada-tantra (X) which is stated to contain a description of some sounds of the Nágara alphabet. From this description we learn that h preceding y is pronounced as jh. Again, h preceding v is pronounced as bh. Initiadly y is pronounced like j. These characteristics are notable in the dialects of Bengal, and, in some cases, in East Bengal.

The colophon to the Mahakaulajñana-vinirñaya mentions Gaudadvipa as its provenance.

The pro-Bengal theories also point out that many of the old works on Tantra, particularly Buddhist Tantra, have been found in Bengal. Moreover, the Tantric works of definitely Bengal provenance contain more of rites and rituals than of philosophy; this is a sign of their earlier origin.

Many of the Sákta Pithas are in Bengal. Though not situated in this province, the Pithas, kámarúpa, Srihatta, Oddiyana (Orissa, according to some) and Purnagiri are in the neighbourhood of Bengal.

Contents of Tantra

Traditionally Tantra deals with five topics — Creation. Dissolution, Worship. Acquisition of supernatural powers, Communion with the Supreme Being.

The Varahi-tantra states the contents of the different classes of Tantric works as follows:

- Àgama srsti, pralaya, devapújä, sádhana, purascarana, satkarma, (márana, uccátana, stambhana, vasikarana, vidvesa, sánti)
- Yámala srsti, jyotisa, ákhyána, nityakarma, karmasástra, varnabheda, játibheda, yugadharma.
- Tantra srsti, pratisrsti, tantra-nirnaya, devatákrti.

tirtha-ásrama, Bráhmana, práni-laksana, yantra, devotpatti, kalpavrksa, jyotisa, pránákhyána, kosa, vrata, saucá-saucá, naraka, ácára, stripurusa-laksana, rájadharma, dánadharma, yugadharma, vyavaháravidhi, adhyátmavarnana, etc.

The contents of a complete Tantric work may be broadly divided as

- Jñána or Vidyá knowledge including philosophical and metaphysical doctrines with a monotheistic tendency and sometimes a monistic bias. This part contains occultism including a knowledge of the mystic bias. This part contains formulae and figures.
- Yoga or Upáya means of mind-control, especially with the object of acquiring magic-powers.
- Kriya containing instructions for making idols and for constructing and consecrating temples.
- Carya or Siddhi rules about rites, festivals and social duties.

This fourfold division of contents is general, but does not apply to each and every Tantric work.

As regards worship, three aspects of the deity, worshipped by a devotee, are recognised. These are sthúla (image), súksma (mantra) and pará (highest, to be apprehended by the mind alone).

Broadly speaking, the contents of Tantra literature fall into two classes, one philosophical and spiritual, the other popular and practical. The latter includes magic, mantra, mudrá, mandala, nyasa, cakra, yantra, etc.

The principal aim of Tantra is liberation and Siddhi (supernatural power).

HUMAN BODY, A MICROCOSM

Kosa

The body is supposed to consist of five kosas (sheaths), viz. annamaya (made of food), pránamaya (consisting of vital breath), manomaya (made of mind), vijñánamaya (consisting of special consciousness), ánandamaya (consisting of joy).

Nádis

The body is believed to contain three crores and a half¹⁵ of nadis (arteries and veins). Of these, seventy-two are regarded as prominent. Of these again, fourteen or ten are the principal ones. Of these fourteen, the most prominent are Idá, Pingalá and Susumná¹⁶.

The last and the longest one extends from mīlādhára to Brahmarandhra in the head. Also called brahmanádi, or moksamárga, it is believed to contain the universe. Through it Kundaliñi is supposed to move upward. Idá is on the left side of the spinal cord. A symbol of the moon, it is white, and represents the Amrta aspect of Sakti. Entering Susumná, its exit is through the left nostril. Pingala is on the right side of the spinal cord. Rising from the Múládhára, it ends in the right nostril. Also called Súrya Nádi, it symbolises the waking condition, and leads persons to violence.

Cakras¹⁷ — The body is believed to contain six Cakras (circle or nerve-plexus). These are as follows:

Múladhára - in the middle of the body, situated in the lowest part of the spinal cord, triangular in shape with its apex downward. It is like a red lotus with four petals. Kundalini is supposed to coil around it.

Svådhisthåna - above the múládhåra, but below the navle. It is like a lotus of six patals, presided over by Goddess Rakini.

Manipura - in the navel. It is like a fotus of ten petals, each petal containing a letter. Also called Nabhicakra, it contains a triangle of the colour of the rising sun. The outer sides of the triangle are represented by three Svastika symbols. It is presided over by a goddess Lakini.

Anáháta - in the region of the heart. It is like a deep red lotus with twelve petals. Seat of air, it is presided over by goddess Kákini.

Visuddha or Bhárati - in the region of the neck. Seat of Sarasvati, it is grey and like a lotus of sixteen petals, presided over by goddess Lákini.

Àj̄n̄á - between the eyebrows. Also called Paramakalá or Muktatriveni, it is like a lotus of two petals white in colour. It is from this cakra that the three nádis, Idā, etc., spread out to different directions. Symbolised by the letters Ha and ksa, it is the seat of mind, presided over by goddess Hakıni. The word Ajña means order, order of guru who is supposed to reside in it.

Cakrabheda or Satcakrabheda (literally meaning penetration of Cakras) means the manifestation or activation of Cakras; it is necessary for keeping the body fit and for the attainment of Siddhis. The six Cakras are identified in some Tantric works with the five elements and the mind18. This idea appears to have been based on the ancient Upanisadic theories; for example, the heart is compared to a lotus, and it is stated to have 101 Nadis; one of them penetrates the crown of the head; a man moving upward by it reaches immortality. In this connexion, the following Upanisads may be consulted; Chandogya Upanisad. VIII. I. I, viii.6.6, Katha vi.16, Prasna iii.6. Certain diagrams also are called Cakras. Different works differ in the names and number of Cakras. The Sricakra is often mentioned19. A Tantra. called Cakrabheda (Deccan College MS. No. 962 of 1884-87) mentions the following five Cakras used in Durgápájá according to Kaulagama.

Rajacakra, Mahácakra, Devacakra, Viracakra, Pasucakra (see Catalogue, vol. XVI on Tantra, p. 163). In another manuscript (Deccan College MS. No. 964 of 1887-91) some other Cakras are described as Akadamacakra, Rnadhana. Sodhanacakra, Rasicakra, Naksatracakra (Catalogue, vol. XVI on Tantra, p. 251).

Sricakra20, also called Sriyantra or Tripuracakra, connected with Srividya, has been described in verses, quoted in the Samkara-Vijaya of Anandagiri (Bib. Indica ed. 1868) p. 255 and in the Setubandha commentary on the Nityasodasikarnava (1.31-34) quoting from Yamala (probably Rudrayamala). The Saundaryalahari (verse 11) also describes it. A somewhat different description occurs in a work called Devirahasya (Deccan College MS. No. 490 of 1895-98). A description of the Cakra is as follows. A Cakra is to be drawn with the bindu in a small triangle. The bindu stands for Sakti or Mülaprakrti solidified. There are nine triangles five of which have their apex downward: these represents Sakti, and four, representing Siva. have their apex upward. The bindu is situated in the smallest triangle pointing downward. There are two pairs of triangles. then 14 triangles, then eight-petalled lotus, 16 petalled lotus, then 3 circles, then three boundary lines with four gates, these ten latter being the outer section of the Yantra and the lotuses of 8 and 16 petals being the inner section of the Yantra. There is a total of 43 angles. The part of the Cakra inside the boundary lines is called bhupura. The worship of Yantra is bahiryaga. Antaryaga is taking awakened Kundalini through the Cakras, from Muladhara to Ajnácakra, and then uniting it with Siva in the Sahasrara-cakra; the six Cakras are identified with the five elements and the mind.

Sahasrára Padma^{at}

At the centre of the head is located the Brahmarandhra through which vital breath or life is supposed to exit at death. It is conceived as a multicoloured lotus of a thousand petals, facing downward.

The Cakras, according to the Kaula system, are as follows in the ascending order: Nadicakra in the janmasthana. Based on it is Máyácakra in the navel (from here it prevades everywhere). Yogacakra (in the heart, centre of yoga), Bhedanacakra (in the tálu region), Dipticakra (Bindusthána in between the eyebrows), Santacakra (in the nádasthána).

The Sádhaka realises it as lustrous like a crore of suns and cool like a crore of moons. By rousing this energy one can reach the higher state of existence. When it is roused, the entire being of a person is flooded with very delicate ambrosia of music; this music is called Kundalini-kūjana (song of Kundalini).

Rele identifies Kundalini with the right vagus nerve. But, Woodroffe (Avalon) discards the view; he says that it is not a nerve or any other physical substance or mental faculty; it is rather the ground substance of both. Kuvalayánanda also rejects Rele's theory. The Rudrayámala (XXXVI. 6-168) gives 1008 names of Kundalini, all beginning with Ka. Sabdabrahma is supposed to reside in Kundalini.

Besides the individual Kundalini, Tantra mentions a Mahákundali. The former develops personal existence. By getting upon Mahakundali one can transcend the narrow personal state, and establish himself in the wide universal state; Mahákundali is at the root of the universe.

HUMAN NATURE

In accordance with the preponderance of the qualities of Sattva. Rajas and Tamas, human nature is divided into three classes. On the basis of these qualities, human propensities have been divided into three classes, viz., Divyabhava, Virabhava and Pasubhava.

The Maitryupanisad (vi. 21) mentions Susumna Nadi as moving upward. The Brhádaranyaka (11.1.19) speaks of 72,000 Nadis.

The Cakras are sometimes identified with the nerve plexuses of modern physiology. This appears to be wrong in view of the fact that, in Tantra these are imaginary things belonging to the subtle body and not the gross body so that these disappear with the death of a person.

A person, with the preponderance of Pasubháva, is tied with the fetters of kindness, infatuation, fear, shame, hatred, family, conduct, caste, etc. In him there is an excess of Rajas over Tamas. He is forgetful, idle and drowsy. He has no faith in guru and mantra. He observes Vedic practices. According to Tantra, he is the worst of men. A person, with Virabháva, due to the predominance of the quality of Rajas, does such acts as lead to grief. One with Divyabháva, having the predominance of the quality of Sattva, is the best. He is kind, pious, pure, truthful, and has an even attitude towards friends and foes.

SADHANÀ — PAÑCATATTVA

Sádhaná (worship, propitiation) is the means to the achievement of Siddhi (success, power). The ways of sádhaná are pújá (external or mental), knowledge of Sástras, japa (muttering prayer), tapas (penance), mantra (incantation), etc.

Sádhakas and Sádhikás are divided, in accordance with their physical, mental and moral qualities, into four classes; viz., (1) Mrdu (2) Madhyama (3) Adhimatraka and (4) Adhimatrama.

According to the Kaula school of Tantra, the sadhakas are of the following classes:

- Prakrti Virácárin engaged in sacrifice and other rituals and resorting to páncatattvas.
- Madhyama Kaulika like Prakrti, with the difference that his mind is more attached to meditation, knowledge and concentration.
- Kaulikottama those who go beyond ritualism, and meditate on the Supreme Being.

In Tántric worship, pañcatattva, also called Kuladravya or Kulatattva, denoting five Mararas, plays an important role. These are madya²² (wine), mámsa (meat), matsya (fish), mudrá (finger-pose), maithuna (sexual intercourse).

Some Tantras recommend sexual intercourse when the female partner is in her monthly illness, and her sexual energy is at its peak. For this act, the best place is the funeral ground among the corpses and blazing fire. This is why the female partner is coloured red in representations in art.

As regards the mode of Tántric sexual act, traditions differ, According to one, perhaps the oldest, the male seed should finally be emitted into the woman's corresponding organ like the offering of scared oil poured into an altar of fire. According to another tradition, the orthodox one, organs must be inhibited, and the energy thus conserved should be turned back and fully sublimated into a radiant inner condition.

The Sadhaka of the Vira type enjoys these things in their literal sense. Those of the Pasu class will take coconut-water or milk, etc., instead of madya, red radish, red sesamum, masúra (a kind of pulse) in place of fish, ginger, sesamum, sait, or garlic for meat; mudra, in this case, denotes barley, rice, etc. Instead of maithuna, they will surrender themselves tike children to the feet of Sakti. For a Sadhaka of the deva type, madya²³ means maddening realisation of the Supreme Being, obtained by Yoga, by which he becomes unconscious of the external world. For him, mámsa means the action by which he dedicates all arts to himself identified with Brahman.

To him matsya means that Sattvika knowledge which enables him to identify himself with all beings, and himself experiences the feelings of pleasure and pain. For him mudra means the giving up of association with all evil things which cause bondage. For such a sadhaka, maithuna means the union of the Kundalini energy, residing in múladhara, with the thousand-petalled Cakra at the centre of the head.

The Kulárnava Tantra gives the following explanation of the Pañcatattvas; Madya, called Tirthávari in some Tantras, is the nectar flowing from the union of Kundalini Sakti with Siva in the sahasrara-cakra in the head²⁴. He eats flesh (mamsa) who, with the sword of knowledge, kills the animals of merit and demerit, and leads his mind to Supreme Siva. He eats fish who controls his senses, and places them in his Atman. Maithuna means the union of Supreme Sakti and Atman; Sakti is aroused in a Kaulika, but not in a devote of the pasu type. Maithuna symbolises the basic unity underlying the apparent duality of everything.

The Mahanirvána (viii. 170-173) recommends madhuratraya (three sweet substances) as substitutes for madya. For Maithuna it substitutes meditation on the feet of Devi and japa of the desired mantra.

Pañcatattva is not prescribed for all Sádhakas. One, who has reached a highst age of spiritual life, can take a pañcatattva, and that also under the guidance of the guru. As a safeguard against unrestrained enjoyment of pancatattvas, alternative articles are prescribed for those having an excess of animal propensities, and, as such, lacking in the requisite self-restraint. Pancatattva is commended for Sádhakas of the Vira type: they are possessed of self-control. Some explain the makáras as follows: Madya is the stream of nectar issuing from the brain-cavity, the abode of the soul. Maisya stands for suppression of vital air.

Mamsa means vow of silence. Mirthuna means meditation on creation and destruction.

The Kaularahasya²⁵ appears to describe how the three Makárás, Madya, Mámsa, Maithuna, were enjoyed by the common people. It speaks of drinking wine up to throat, eating meat and enjoying beautiful women. Quoting the Kaularahasya, the Hamsavilása (p. 104) says that bhoga and moksa do not coexist. But, for one, who enjoys beautiful women, both these come handy.

All, from Bráhmanas to low-class people, are entitled to Kauladharma according to the mahánirvána (xiv 184).

The Kaulávali-nirnaya (V. 113-123) suggests the following substitutes for the Makáras. A Bráhmana can use honey in a copper vessel or cow's milk or coconut-water in a bell-metal vessel. In the absence of meat, garlic and ginger can be used. Buffalo-milk or that of the sheep may be used for fish. Roasted fruits and roots may be used for Maithuna.

Some²⁶ are of the opinion that the significance of the Makáras was deliberately preverted by vicious people.

It seems that the use of Makaras by Tántric devotees brought slur upon Tántric practices. As a result, works like the Sakti-sangama started suggesting symbolic interpretations of them.

Tantra recognises the fact that, for progress along the path of Sádhana, one has to prepare the body, vital breath and mind. The body can be made fit by different postures (ásanas). For preparing the vital breath, one has to practice pránáyáma. This is prepared by bhavana (contemplation).

Three stages of sadhana are mentioned. These are

- Suddhi ridding oneself of physical and mental impurities.
- Sthiti getting rid of the darkness of delusion and the light of knowledge shining.
- Arpana realisation of one's identity with the object of meditation.

For a sádhaka, essential are nana, tarpana, sandhyá, pújá and homa.

Kundalini-yoga²⁷

This is the basic thing for Tántric sádhana. The dormant spiritual energy is supposed, to coil round múlúdhúra like a serpent²⁸. Its gradual ascent, by penetrating the Cakras, up to the apex (brahmarandhra) is the culmination of Sádhana.

Puja

Tantra provides that one must identify oneself with the deity one worships. Nyása dhyána, japa are important elements in pújá. The offerings may be five to ten in number. In Tantra, mánasa puja (mental worship) is regarded as superior to external puja. The Saktananda-tarangini (vi) says that the search for god outside, having disregarded god within onself is the like the quest of glass ignoring the Kaustubha jewel in one's own hand. Self-surrender characteristics Tántric pújá.

Siddhi

Siddhi, attainable through sádhana, may be of many kinds, e.g., mantrasiddhi (Success in mantras), váksiddhi (success in speech). By the former, mantra is made to secure the desired result. By the latter, the speech becomes infallible. After reaching the peak of spiritual life, one can posses the eight siddhis, viz., animá (power of assuming an atomic figure), mahimá (power of increasing one's size at will), laghimá (assuming excessive lightness at will), lsitva (acquiring superority over others), vasitva (subduing all to one's will) Prapti (obtaining anyting at will) prakamya (irresistible will), kamavasayita (suppression of passion or desire).

According to the Mahanirvana (II. 14-15), Vedic mantras led to desired results in Satya and other Yugas. But, in Kali Age, these are like serpents without venom or like dead beings. In this age, Tantric mantras yield quick results, and lead to salvation. This Tantra prescribes (iii. 14) that the mantra Om sac-cid-ekam brahma in the best; mere perfection in this mantra causes the soul to merge in Brahma.

Sometimes, the repetition of a mantra is recommended for a lac or even five lac times to ensure great effect like control of even a king.

In some cases, Tantric mantras are required to be recited like a Vedic one, with the names of the sage, the meter, the deity and Viniyoga (application).

Some Vedic mantras also are used in Tantra, but for purposes other than those in the Veda. For example, the mantra jatavedase sunavama (Rv. I. 99.1), though addressed to Agni, is employed in invocation to Durgá.

Mantra differs from prayer in that, while the former has fixed syllables, the latter may be said in any form. The syllables of a mantra are regarded as the manifestation of Sakti.

Varieties of mantra are called by various names such a Kavaca, Hrdaya, Astra, Raksa., etc.

As seed is sown on a soil which is cultivated and watered, so a bñja-mantra is put into a disciple's heart which is pure and has been drenched by the water of God's mercy. The Mahánirvána (V. 18-19) states that Bijas like Hrim, Krim make the form of the deity visible.

Most of the Tantras, particularly the Parasurama-kalpasútra Jnánárnava. the Sáradátilaka, hold that mantras possess wonderful and incomprehensible power. The Parasurama-kalpasútra (1.7.11) mentions faith as the cause of this power. The Saradatilaka (II. 57,59) divides mantras into three classes, viz., masculine, feminine and neuter. Those ending in Hum and Phat are male, those ending in Tha are female and those ending in Namas are neuter.

Purascarana

It literally means performing or carrying out before something. The Kularnava (xvii. 87) states that Purascarana is so called because, by the five-fold upasana, the desired deity moves before the worshipper for conferring her favour on him. According to the Vayaviya-samhita, the perfecting of the procedures of the Múlamantra is called Purascarana, because it has to be performed before the acts in which it is to be employed. In Tantra, it means a rite in which Vedic and Tántric mantras are repeated. The Purascarana of a mantra has the following constituents; dhyána, pújá, japa, homa, tarpana, abhiseka and feeding Brahmanas. In a shorter form, the first three are performed. Dasánga Purascarana consist in the following additional items: aghamarsana, suryarghya, jalpana (Kaulavalinimaya XV). It has been dealt with in many Tantras of which the following are important: Māhanirvana (vii. 76.85), Kularava (XV 7-9, 11-12), Sardatilaka (11-138-140) Ahirbudhnya (XX.52-53), Jayakhyasamhitá (Patala 19. verses 13-33). Saktisamgama, Sundari III 155-56. XIV 45-46. Gandharva XXVIII.7-8.

Purascaryárnava, VI, p. 413, Kálivilása-tantra IV,6-7, Krsnanánda's Tantrasára.

Raghavabhatta, in his commentary on the Saradatilaka (xvi-56), deals exhaustively with details of Purascarana that ARE common to all mantras.

It is regarded as indispensable for making the mantra effective. Raghavabhatta says that as a man, in the grip of a disease, cannot do anything, so a mantra without Purascarana is abortive.

The places, suitable for this rite, are a holy place, river bank, cave, top of a mountain, confluence of rivers, root of a Bilva tree, temple, seashore, any place where one feels happy.

One, performing this rite, is required to eat food obtained by begging (for Brahmacarin and Yati) havisyanna, vegetables, fruits, milk, bulbous roots, barley.

The practices, to be avoided, are sexual intercourse, meat, wine, speaking with women and Sudras.

Japa should be done from morning to noon.

After the rite is commenced, the devotee may encounter obstacles, disturbances and terrible sights. If he remains unmoved, he will achieve miraculous results. If he sticks to the prescribed long time, he will get joy, see pleasant dreams, hear sweet music and enjoy fragrance; these are some of the signs of the perfection of the mantra.

There are varying modes of Purascarana in accordance with the nature of the devotees, Pasu, Vira and Divya.

Yoga

In Tantra, Yoga is mainly twofold, hathayoga and samádhiyoga. The former consists in physical discipline paving the way to mind-control.

Hathayoga has the following five accessories instead of the eight prescribed in the yoga system of Patanjali.

Yama — control of the senses, non-violence, etc.

Niyama - study of Sástras, meditation on God.

Pránáyáma — control of breath.

Pratyáhára — withdrawl of the sense from the wordly objects.

Asana — a particular posture of the body.

Samadhiyoga is sixfold:

Dhyána, Náda, Rasánanda, Layasiddhi, Bhakti, Rája.

The fundamental difference between the Yoga of the Yogasastra of Patañjali and Yoga in Tantra is this. In Tantra there is no difference between Sakti and Tattva so that Sakti surmounts all obstacles, and effects the union of the yogin with the Supreme Siva. Patañjali, however, does not recognise any Supreme power excepting Prakrti so that the yogin has no familiarity with any Sakti beyond Prakrti.

Káya (or Deha) — Siddhi

A fundamental difference between the Bráhmanical Sástra and Tantra is that, while the former ordains physical suffering or self-mortification as a means to the goal, the latter emphasises the value of the body as means to Sádhaná. This is not to say that the Bráhmanical Sástra neglects the body. On the contrary, it regards the body as the very first means for the practice of dharma. As Kalidasa says (Kumarasambhava, V.) sariram adyam khalu dharmasadhanam. The Smrti-sastra contains elaborate rules for having a good health and recipe for long life. But, it lays a great stress on long fast, arduous and strenuous rites and rituals, abstention from wine, etc., continence and restraint in enjoyments of the objects of sense.

Tantra, however, allows the devotee to include in enjoyment of the objects of sense, of course within limits. The core of Tantra Sadhana is mukti through bhukti, a concept absolutely foreign to the orthodox religion and philosophy. Manu unwquivocally states

Pravrttiresá bhútanám nivrttistu maháphalá/

There is inclination of creatures for these things; cessatiion of desire, however, leads to great result.

While orthodox Indian philosophy is concerned more with salvation in the other world, Tántric philosophy vigorously advocates jivanmukti (liberation in life).

A school of Tántric-Alchemic thinkers used to believe that, by certain yogic processes, mantras and chemical drugs, the body of flesh and blood could be made imperishable so that it could defy death. The Káladahana and Mrtyuñjaya Tantras are stated to contain methods of Káyasiddhi (making the body fit or unconscionably longlived).

It is believed that when kåyasiddhi takes place, the body, strong as Vajra and full of youthful lustre, does not become subject to decay, disease and death. The conception is nothing new with the Buddhists and Alchemists in whose treatises it has been dealt with in detail. The power of yoga in rendering the body free from the ills, to which it is ordinarily subjected, has been clearly stated in the following lines of the Svetásvatara Upanisad (2, 12);

na tasya rogo na jará na mrtyuh / práptasya yogágnimayam sariram /

One, having a body conditioned by yoga, has no disease, no decrepitude nor death.

The great efficacy of mercury and mica, in imparting adamantine strength to the body and preserving it for an incredible length of time, has been recognised particularly in the works on alchemy. Mercury is called *Parada*²⁹ or Rasa. It is believed to be Siva's Semen (Siva-virya) and mica is supposed to be derived from Sakti.

It is interesting to note that the Natha sect of Yogins, traditionally originated by Adinatha and introduced among the people by Matsyendranatha, later influenced by the Bauls and Sahajiya Sadhakas, following the Vajrayana mode, vigorously practised Kayasiddhi. The Nathas believed in a process which is briefly this.

The thousand-petalled lotus within the head is turned down. This has to be turned upward by yoga. The mind has to be bathed in the nectar contained in that lotus where Pranava (Omkara) is to be meditated upon. The gateway of Brahmarandhra is to be shut. These things being done, the downward flow of ambrosia is checked. This process is called Akasacandra-bheda by the Yogina. It is supposed that the juice, exuded within the body, is drifted upward by the upblowing wind, and is stored in Sahasrara. The believers in this theory admit four kinds of Candra (moon), viz., Adicandra, Nijacandra, Unmadacandra, and Garalacandra. Nijacandra, which is of the nature of juice, taken upward, should be united with Akasacandra which is attached to Sahasrara. Finally, the yogin will drink the Garalacandra, which purifies the body and mind, and invigorates the system; this leads to Siddhadeha.

The Buddhists and Vaisnava Sahajivas believe in Kayasiddhi as the object of sadhana.

In the New Testament (Book IV); there is mention of supernatural birth, Birth from Above; this is supposed by some to refer to a body obtained by some sort of kayasadhana.

Footnotes

- It is believed that these regions were so named according to the means of transport used in them. Vishu, Ratha, Asva, Gaja mean respectively sea-going vessel, chariot, horse and elephant.
 - For the regions, indicated by these names, see Glossary.
- Vide Tantrik Texts, Vol. 1, ed. A. Avalon, Intro., pp. ii-iv.
- Vide P. C. Bagchi, Studies in Tantras, p. 3, 4.
- See Bahvrcopanisad Saisa para saktih kadividyeti va hadividyeti va sadividyeti. Also see comm. on it.
- Vide H. P. Sastri, Nepal Catalogue, I. pp. 10, 85, 117.

- JASB, XXVI 1930, pp. 129 f.f.
- On the question of the priority of Buddhist Tantra over Hindu Tantra or vice versa, see B. Bhattacharya, Sadhanamala (Intro., II, P. LXXVIII) and Winternitz HIL II, p. 401.
- 8. For example, Harsacrita (ed. Kane), I. pp. 10, 25, 50 etc., Kadambari (ed. Kale), p. 56.
- 9. Vide Foote, Collection of Indian Pre-historic and Protohistoric Antiquities, Madras, 1916; K. R. Subramaniam, Origin of Savism and its History in Tamil land, Madras, 1920, Iyenger, Stone Age in India, Madras.
- 10. HIL, ii, p. 635.
- 11. Winternitz, History of Indian Literature, 1, 1927, p. 591.
- 12. According to some, the name is the Hinduised form of kame-kha, the name of a goddess worshipped by the Khash tribe in the form of a yoni (female organ). See N. N. Bhattacharya, History of Tantric Religion, p. 103.
- 13. Vide Vanglar Sadhana by K. M. Sen, pp. 47-48.
- 14. We shall see that this Tantra originated in Bengal.
- 15. According to some, 72,000.
- 16. See Pranatosini, 1. 4, Satcakranirupana, Raghavabhatta's comm. on Saradatilaka, xxv. 38.
- 17. See Niruttara X.
- 18. E.g. Saundaryalahari, v. 9
- 19. See Sakti and Sakta by Woodroffe (3rd ed.) p. 399, G. Kaviraj describes the system of Cakras according to Goraksanatha in Sarasvatibhavana Studies, II pp. 83-92. In the translation of Satcakranirupana (plates i-vli), Avalon illustrates the six Cakras and Sahasrara (plate VIII) along with their colours, etc. For Cakras with illustrations, see C. W. Leadbeater, Cakras.
- 20. See P. V. Kane, History of Dharmasastra, V. pt. 2, pp. 1137-38.
- 21. See satcakranirupana XLI-XLIII.
- 22. Sometimes called Sura which, according to Matrka-bheda-tantra (iii.40) is so called as it imparts suratva (divinity) as - soon as drunk.

- According to some, a preparation of hemp, called Vijaya or Bhang.
- 24. This is the view also of the Kaulajnana-nirnaya (vi. 18-19) and Bhaskararaya in his comm. on the Lalitasahasra-nama (verses 87-91).
- Deccan College MS. No. 959 of 1884-87 (Copied Samvat 1790-1734 A.D.)
- E.g. D. N. Bose, Tantras their philosophy, etc., p. 110.
- For the scientific basis of Kundalini, and the attitude of modern scientists to it, see Gop Krishna, Biological Basis of Religion and Genius, and Its introduction by Weizsacker.
- It seems to be anticipated by sarparajni (serpent-queen) of the Rgveda.
- 29. By Gopinath Kaviraj, reputed as a Tantric Sadhaka of a high order. He notes that one, Ramalinga Sastrin of Cidambaram, Madras (Tamil Nadu), who lived about a hundred years ago, attained Kayasiddhi. See G. Kaviraj, Tantric Sadhana O Siddhanta, II, p. 166.

Chapter-2
Nature of Tantric Doctrines

Chapter-2

These are Advaita (non-dualistic), Dvaita (Dualistic) and Dvaitadvaita (dualistic-non-dualistic). The 64 Bhairava Agamas, stated to have emanated from the mouth of Siva are Advita. Ten Saiva Àgamas are Davita. In 18 Raudra Àgamas there is a mixture of different doctrines.

Theory of Creation — Siva, Sakti

The Supreme Brahman is eternal and unchanging. He is both niskala and sakala; *kal*á means Prakrti.

The Sakti of Brahman is eternal and inseparable from Him. This sakti is nirguna (without attributes) and saguna (with attributes). As goddess in the form of consciousness, she manifests the being and, through her as goddess in the form of bliss (ánanda).

Brahman manifests Himself. Sakti pervades the universe like oil in sesamum. From Brahma-Sakti arose Nada from which proceeded Bindu.

The subtle body of the goddess is referred to as *mulamantrátmik*á (constituted by the basic mantra).

Siva, entangled in the web of Maya, and the latent Sakti are conceived as the supreme Bindu.

The Bindu, circular in shape, is bounded by the circumference of Máyá. At its centre is the place of Brahman, the abode of Prakrti-Purusa. This very Bindu is Prakrti-Purusa, Sabda-Brahman or Apara-Brahman.

As a result of the union of Siva and Sakti, the goddess becomes inclined (unmukhi) to Siva. Then the web of Máyá is snapped, and creation proceeds.

The relationship of Siva and Sakti is controversial. According to the Kularnava (i. 110), some advocate non-duality, others desire duality.

Sabda-Brahman manifests itself in three Saktis, viz., Jāána (knowledge), Icchá (desire) and Kriya (action).

The following terms are used to convey the completeness of Siva.

Svatantratá (independence), nityatá (eternality), nitya-trptatá (quality of being ever contented), sarvajñatá (omniscience).

From Paramasiva arises Sambhu, from Sambhu Sadasiva, from Sadasiva Isána and Rudra, Vishnu, Siva arise with their own Saktis without which they have no power.

In the Mahánirvána Siva has been called Sambhu, Sadásiva Sankara, Mahesvara, etc., each term indicating the different conditions, qualities or manifestation of the single Siva.

Sakti is the form of both Máyá and Múlaprakrti. Through the power of Máyá, Brahman conceals His own form, and appears in different manifestations. Múlaprakrti is unmanifested. In the manifest condition, she resides in the universe consisting of diverse names and forms.

Siva-Sakti resides in the múladhara and Kundalini within the human body. In all processes, Sabda-Brahman resides in the form of Kundalini and in manifested as aksaras (letters).

The order of creation, according to Tantra, is as follows.

Mulaprakrti-Sakti (resorting to Siva)

	Mahat
Ahamkara	Taijasa or	Tamasika
(Vaikarika	Rajasika	or
or Sattvika	Ahamkara	Ahamkara of beings Panca Tanmatra Pancabhuta

Sakti is variously called Máyá, Mahámáyá, Devi, Prakrti, etc. She is both Vidya and Avidya. As Avidyá she causes bondage, and as Vidya she destroys rebirths and gives liberation. She is called Adyá Sakti (the Primeval Energy) as she is believed to have existed before creation. As the manifestation of Cit in Prakrti, she is called the Denoting Power (vácakasakti). Being in the form of Cit, she is also the Denoted Power (vácya-sakti).

Atman is to be conceived as Devi. So Devi or Sakti is but a manifestation of Siva in the form of mother. She is Ambika and Lalita.

As Parabrahmna, Devi is beyond form, beyond quality. She is conceived in three forms. In the first or supreme form she is beyond knowledge. Her second body is subtle, being constituted by mantra; this aspect is beyond meditation. Her third form is the gross body which is easily comprehensible.

As Mahádeva, Sakti exists in different forms, e.g., Sarasvati, Laksmi, Durga, Annapurna, etc. As Sati, Uma, Parvati, etc., she is the consort of Siva. As Sati she manifested herself as ten Mahávidyás. When she renounced her body, Siva carried the dead body which Visnu cut into 51 pieces which fell at different places which came to be called Mahá-pitha-sthánas. At each such place, Devi along with her Bhairava, is worshipped.

Despite her endless forms, in which she resides in the objects of the universe, she is in reality one. As the single moon, reflected in the waves, appears to be many, so the single Sakti has diverse manifestations.

Sakti constantly resort to Siva. She first manifested herself when the universe emerged. Before this, Sakti was dormant in Siva.

The existence of Parama Siva in an attributeless condition is generally called Sunya in Saiva Agamas. It is beyond comprehension. It is also called as it is beyond all definitions or knowledge.

Tantra and Sákta works

These two kinds of works have many things in common. The chief difference is that, in the Sakta works, Sákti or Devi is the highest object of worship. But, in Tantras, Sakti may not necessarily be treated as the highest divinity. These may be agnostic. Vedantic or Sámkhyaite in outlook. B. Bhattacharya (in Intro. to Sadhanamálá II) may have overemphasised the importance of Sakti by saying that a real Tantra must have an element of Sakti. It should be noted that Sakti is the designation also of the woman (one's own wife or wife of another person) with whom sexual intercourse (maithuna as one of the five makaras) is to be had in a Tántric rite. She is also called Latá, and this ritual is called Latásádhana (Mahanirvána, 1.52).

DASAMAHÀVIDYÀ

In Tantra, Sakti is also called Vidyá or Máhavidyá. The same Sakti, who is second to none, has been conceived in ten aspects. So, they are collectively known as Dasamahavidyá. The names differ in different works.

In the Camunda-tantra, the names are as follows:

Kali, Tárá, Sodasi, Bhuvanesvari, Bhairavi, Chinnamastá, Dhumavati, Vagalá, Mátangi, Kamalá.

The Málini-vijaya gives the following list:

Káli, Nilá, Mahádurgá, Tvaritá, Chinnamastaká, Vágvádini, Annapúrná, Pratyangiras, Kámákhyá, Vásali, Bálá, Mátangi, Sailavásini. The number is 13.

The list in the Mundamálá-tantra tallies with that in the Cámunda-tantra above.

The Mahavidyas have been divided, in some Tantras. e.g., Niruttara (i. 6-8) into two groups — those belonging to Kalikula (the family of Kali) and those belonging to Srikula (family of Laksmi). To the former belong Kali, Tara, Chinnamasta, Bhuvanesvari, Mahisamardini, Tripura, Tvarita, Durga, Vidya and Pratyangiras. To the latter belong Sundari, Bhairavi, Bala, Vagala, Kamala, Dhumávati, Matangi, Svapnavati, Madhumati and Mahávidyá. The total number is 20.

Some scholars are of opinion that from the Buddhist Sádhanamálá it appears that the idea of Máhavidyás was derived from Buddhist Tantra.

Acára

In Tantra, various modes of sådhanå are recognised. These are seven according to some Tantras, nine according to others. In the Kulárnava (chap.ii), the following modes are mentioned:

(i) Vedacárá, (ii) Vaisnavácára, (iii) Saivácára, (iv) Daksinacara,
 (v) Vámácára, (vi) Siddhántácára, (vii) Kaulacara.

Each succeeding in the list is higher than the preceding one. Vedacára consists in an abundance of Vedic rituals. In the second one, the Sadhaka gives up a blind faith, and has firm faith in the saving power of Brahman. It is the way of devotion. In the third one, the devotee enters into the way of knowledge. In it, he combines bhakti and sakti with faith; he tries to acquire sakti. In the fourth mode, the sadhaka becomes able to meditate upon the three saktis of kriya, icchá and Jñána of Brahman, and acquire fitness for the worship of the three, viz. Brahman, Visnu and Mahesvara. In the fifth one, the sádhaka proceeds from pravritti (activity) to nivrtti (cessation of desire). In it, he cuts the bonds of delusion, shame etc. with which a person of pasubhava is tied. According to the Parananda-sutra (p.p. 1-3, 13), Vámácára is of two kinds, viz. Madhyama in which all the five Makaras are resorted to, and Uttama in which only Madya, Mudra and Maithuna are resorted to. The word Vama apparently means 'left' as distinguished from Daksina (right) in Daksinacara. Some take it as Vámá (woman); Vámácára, according to them, means that acara which emphasises woman as an essential element in Sádhana. The way to the attainment of Sivahood, got in this acara, is completed in the sixth. He can now, with the help of the guru, reach Kailacara. In this condition, he becomes liberated in life (Jivanmukta) and with the knowledge of Brahman, reaches the state of Paramahamsa; this is the highest goal of Tantric sádhana.

The Mahánirvána (x. 112) holds that one does not become a Kaula by merely drinking wine, but by undergoing Abhiseka. Generally worship with the five Makaras is known as Kulácára.

According to the Mahánirvána (vii. 97-98), Kula is the designation of the individual soul, Prakrti, space, time, Àkása.

earth, water, fire and wind. The way of life, by which one looks upon all these as Brahman, is called Kulácára.

According to the Saktsamgama (Kálikhánda, Chap. iii. 32), Kula means Upásakas (worshippers) of Káli. The Kulárnava states that Kula means gotra, and that arises from Siva and Sakti. A man is called Kaulika if he knows that Moksa is attained from that, i.e. Siva and Sakti. Siva is called Akula, Sakti. Kula.

Other definitions of Kula are suggested in other works, e.g. Gujyasamāja (Patala I. p. 6), Preface, P. viii of the Saktisamgama, Tárākhanda. In some Tantras, there are three Mārgas (paths), viz. Daksina, Vama and Uttara, each succeeding one being superior to the preceding one. Daksina-mārga is that which is declared in the Veda, Smrti and Purana. Vāma is declared in the Veda, Smrti and Agama. Uttara is what is declared by the words of the Veda and of the Guru.

In some texts, Acáras are broadly divided into two classes, Aghora and Yoga. Aghora is the name of the acara, followed by Aghorins, a Saiva sect.

Guru¹, Sisya², Diksa³, Abhiseka⁴

Tantra believes that one can take to sadhaná only when initiated by the guru. The guru must have certain qualities. He will decide the suitability of a mantra for a particular disciple. A female guru is highly suitable; one's mother is one's best guru. Initiation by one's father is forbidden. The husband is not allowed to initiate his wife.

The concept of Diksá is Vedic. Vedic initiation was a must for the three higher castes. It was, however, denied to women in Smrti. Tantric Diksá is more elaborate, and is allowed even to women and Súdras.

A person, fit for being Guru, must be calm, of unimpeachable character, versed in Sástra, free from avarice, truthful. Buddhist Tantras, like the Jñánasiddhi, identify the Guru with the Buddha, and regard him as omniscient. In some Tantras, warning against hypocritical Gurus has been sounded.

Some Tantras, e.g. Nirvanatantra, mention four classes of gurus, viz., guru, parámaguru, parapara-guru and paramesthiguru. According to the Nilatantra (V. 73), Goddess Sakti is Parapara-guru, Siva is Parámesthi-guru, one's preceptor is his guru and guru's guru is Para or Paramaguru. Some works (e.g., Nilatantra vv. 65, 66) divide gurus into three classes, viz., Divyaugha (divine beings), Siddhaugha (sages) and Mánavaugha (human beings). It appears to divide gurus, in another way, into two classes, viz., Táráguru (V. 64) and Devaguru (V.71). Some other Tantras (e.g., Syámárahasya) also give the above classification of gurus.

tt is stated that the names of male gurus should end in ananda (e.g., Brahmananda) or nátha (e.g., Matsyendranatha. Minanatha), and those of the female preceptors in — amba⁵.

After naming some gurus, the Nilatantra characterises them as belonging to Tárinìkala, i.e., a line of gurus imparting Tarini-mantra (V.68).

The position of the guru among the Tantric Sadhakas is so exalted that he is regarded as even superior to one's father. The Nilatantra, for instance, cites the verse (ii. 146) of Manu, which extols the preceptor, imparting Vedic initiation to a person, as superior to the progenitor; obviously, it substitutes Tantric diksá for Vedic initiation. This Tantra, in another context (V. 68), declares that the mantrada (giver of mantra) is superior to one's father (janakádadhika). Indian culture does not set must store by the physical birth of flesh and blood which is common to lower animals. It lays greater stress on intellectual and spiritual regeneration as more important than mere generating the mass of flesh. The wise Indians of old expressed the sublime idea that the body is sure to perish (ekántavidhvamsi), whereas merits last through ages (Kalpánta-stháyino gunáh).

Among other qualities of a Sisya; he must be respectful and look upon the Guru, Devatá and Mantra as one. It is incumbent upon him to keep secret the mantra and puja imparted to him by his Guru. He should surrender his body, wealth and even life to the Guru.

The position of the Tantric Guru is so important that he is considered as capable of appeasing even Siva if he is angry, but there is no means to pacify the indignant Guru. As mantra was believed to be extremely powerful, the person who gave it came to occupy an exalted position.

The Paranandasútra (pp 15-16, Sutras 56,63) clearly sets forth the function of a Guru who, among other practices, should ask the neophyte, who has accepted the three Makaras of Madya, Mudra and Maithuna offered by him, to follow the Kaula practices.

The Mahánirvána states (V. 201-202) that the person of the same sect. Sákti, Saiva, Vaisnava, Saura or Ganapatya, as that of the Sisya can be his Guru.

Kaulácára was so important that the Kulárnava (ii. 11, 16) and the Mahánirvána (iv. 42) hold that one, who has studied the Veda but is ignorant of Kuladharma, is inferior to a Candala. Again a Candala, aware of Kuladharma, is superior to a Brahmana.

According to the Mahánirvána, all, from Brahmanas to the untouchables, have right to Kula practices. Some, however, hold that one, who has not conquered one's senses, has no right to it. Ramesvara, commentator of the Parasuramakalpasutra, holds this view.

Diksa⁶ has been exhaustively dealt with in some well-known Tantras, e.g., Prapañcasára (v.vi), Kulárnava (14.39 ff), Sáradátilaka, (Patala 4), Jnanarnava (Patala 24), Pranatosini (II.4), Mahánirváná (X. 112-119). It has been discussed in the Diksaprakasika of Visnubhatta, pupil of Satyanandanatha, composed in Sakt 1719 (1797 A.D.).

The word Diksá is generally derived from the root dá (to give) and ksi (to destroy). Thus, it means that it confers on the disciple a divine state or knowledge, and destroys sins.

Diksá is of two kinds, viz.

Bahirdiksa — consisting of puja, homa and other external rites.

The Sattvika feeling is aroused by it.

Antardiksá — it helps in the awakening of the kundalini energy.

According to some, diksá is of three kinds, viz.

Sámbhavi — by it the mind is purified.

Sákti - by it the spiritual energy aroused.

Mántri — it arouses the power of mantra and gods.

The Visvasára-tantra provides for four forms of diksá, viz. Kriyávati, Kalávati Varnamayi and Vedhamayi. These have been defined in the Glossary.

The Kularnava (XVI) states seven kinds, viz., Kriya, Varna, Kala, Sparsa, Vak, Drk, Manasa^a.

According to the Rudrayámala^a, diksa is of three kinds, viz., *Ánavi*¹⁰, Sákti and SámbhavÁ.

The other forms of diksá are Krama, Pancayatana, Ekamantra¹¹, etc.

By diksá a person advances on the way to salvation by getting the malas (impurities) in him removed. The malas are Anava — it causes the rise of the narrow jivahood of Siva, without its removal the realisation of the identity of Sakti is not possible.

Buddhigata -- by removing it one acquires real knowledge.

Máyiya — it is the cause of Ahamkára, the root of the knowledge of visaya and visayin. Salvation is not possible without its removal.

According to the Kálivilása Tantra (vi. 3-4), the best time for Diksa is Svati Naksatra on Friday on the fifth tithi of the dark half of Phalguna.

The Saktisamgama (Tárákhanda, xvii. 36-38) holds that an eclipse of the sun or the moon, particularly the latter, is the best time when consideration is necessary regarding the week day, tithi, naksatra, month, etc. The Jnanarnava (quoted in the Smrti-digest, Nirnayasindhu p. 67) prefers the solar eclipse.

The Yoginitantra, quoted in the same work, condemns Diksa on a lunar eclipse.

The concept of Diksá (initiation) is not new in Tantra. It has been an age-old one having prevailed since Vedic times. In the Rgveda, the word diksá is used as the name of the wife of Soma; in the Puránas, it is the name of the wife of Rudra Ugra or Rudra Vamadeva. In the Mahábhárata, Harivamsa, etc., the word denotes any serious preparation (as for battle). In words like viraha-diksa, srngara-diksa, etc., diksá means self-devotion to a person or god, complete resignation or restriction to, exclusive occupation with, etc.

In the Vedic sacrament of Upanayana, initiation by the Acárya is essential. The idea underlying diksá is regeneration. This is clear from the word djiva (twice-born). By upanayana one is born for the second time; that is, after receiving physical birth from the parents, a person gets the second birth, i.e., intellectual and spiritual birth from the preceptor.

The Aitareya Bráhmana (i. 3) clearly brings out the likeness of the regeneration of a person by upanayana with the birth of a child from the embryonic stage.

The same idea appears to be at the root of the provision of an eclipse as the most suitable time for Tantric diksa. In an eclipse, the sun or moon is supposed to die to be born again.

The regeneration of a Tantric initiate is also indicated by a new name given to him by the Guru.

It is interesting to note that some tribes, both in India and some other countries, perpetuating primitive customs, regard initiation as essential in certain matters. For instance, among some tribes of Central India, one, who has not observed the puberty rites, is subjected to social ostracism¹². In Fiji, youths, who do not undergo circumcision, are debarred from many social privileges¹³. Social opprobrium and tabooes are attached to the uninitiated members of some Central and South-East Australian tribes¹⁴. In some primitive secret societies, with tribal chiefs at the head, initiation particularly into tribal behaviour, customs and sex-life, is regarded as indispensable¹⁵.

The Buddhists Tantra, entitled Guhya-samája, reminds one of the aforeasaid secret societies. In this connection, it deserves notice that the general principles of Buddhist initiation are believed to have been influenced by the system of tribal initiation¹⁶.

Initiation of a special type is called abhiseka. Abhisekas of different kinds are applicable to disciples in different stages of spiritual life. These are (i) Sáktábhiseka, (ii) Púrnábhiseka, (iii) Kramadiksábhiseka, (iv) Sámrájyabhiseka, (v) Mahasamrajyabhiseka, (vi) Yogadiksabhiseka, (vii) Pranadiksábhiseka (viii) Mahapurna-diksábhiseka.

The first two are the most important. Abhiseka consists in sprinkling holy water on the neophyte while reciting mantras to propitiate different deities, especially for warding off evil spirits. For Purnabhiseka, one has to undergo severe ordeals; it is believed to confer divinity on the devotee.

Mudrá, Mandala, Yantra, Nyása

Mandalas or diagrams are an indispensable item in Tantric worship. It also became an essential feature in some orthodox Brahmanical rites and rituals.

The Jñánárnava (xxiv. 8-10, xxvi. 15-17) holds that Mandala and Cakra are synonymous. It describes several Mandalas. The Sáradátilaka (III. 113-118, 131-134, 135, 139) and some other works describe some Mandalas.

Both Hindu and Buddhist Tantras attach great importance to Mandalas. Some Tantras, e.g., Mahánirvána (X. 137-138), refer to Mandalas drawn with coloured powders. In the Mañjusrinñlakalpa, Mandalas are described with special direction for painting them. The Guhyasamája speaks of a Mandala of sixteen cubits with a Cakra inside. The Nispanna-yogávali of Abhayákaragupta of the time of the Bengal king Rámapála (11th-12th cent.) describes twenty-six Mandalas, each in a separate chapter.

Some of the Manadalas are Sarvatobhadra, Caturlingatobhadra, Prásáda-vástu-mandala, Grhavástu-mandala, Hariharamandala. Ekalingato-bhadra. The Sarvatobhadra (auspicious on all sides) has been common to all kinds of worship.

The word Mandala also denotes a gathering of Tántric devotees who collectively perform rituals involving Pancamakaras. They, along with their female partners, surround the leader (nayaka) who, accompanied by his consort, sits in the middle. The Kaulavalinirnaya (VIII) and the Mahanirvana (VIII. 154-56) deal with Mandala.

Mudrá is one of the Makaras or Pañcatattvas, essential for Tántric Sádhaña. It generally means poses of the hand or finger. Esoteric meanings of the word have been stated in connexion with Pañcatattva. The Kulárnava (xvii. 57) derives the word from root mud (to give delight, pleasure) and 'dravay' (causative or dru), and says that it is so called as it gives delight to gods, and melt their minds.

The Saradátilaka (XXII 106) also gives the etymological meaning of the word as that by which all gods are delighted. The commentator, Raghavabhattam derives the word as mudam ráti dadáti (that which gives delight).

There is a great divergence among the Tantras regarding the names, number and definition of Mudrás. The Tántric Texts (I. p.46-f) contain a list of Mudrás with names and definitions. It is stated that Aváhani and eight others are the nine common Mudras. Then nineteen Mudrás, especially suitable for Visnu worship, are mentioned. Ten Mudrás, suitable for Siva, are enumerated. One for the worship of the sun and seven for that Ganesa are mentioned. The Mudra-nighantu also names and defines nine Mudras including Avahani. Then it names 19 Mudras. The Naradatantra, quoted in the Varsakriyákaumdi of Govindananda, describes the Mudrás specially suitable for Visnu worship.

The Sáradátilaka (XXIII. 106-114) names and defines nine Mudras. The Jñánárnava (iv. 31-47, 51-56, XV.46-68) mentions over thirty Mudrás. The Jayákhya-samhitá (Patala 8) mentions fifty-eight. The Visnusamhita (vii. 45) says that Mudras are innumerable, it names and defines about thirty. The Kamakalavilasa refers (verses 46, 47) to nine Mudras. The Nityásodásika mentions nine. Some other noted Tantras, dealing with Mudrás, are the Kulárnava (xvii. 90-93) Kaulavali-nirnaya (vii.5-14), Mahánirvána (vi.77).

The nine Mudras, described in the *Saradatilaka*¹⁷, are as follows:

- ÀváhanÀ Folding both hands in a hollow illing the hollow fully with flowers.
- Sthápanì Same as the above, but the folded hands are held upside down.
- Sannidhápana Two hands formed into a closed fist, and joined together with only the thumbs raised up.
- Sannirpdhani Same as the above with the thumbs closed inside the fist.
- Sammukhikarani Two closed fists held upwards.
- Sakalikrti Action of making the Nyasa of the six limbs on the limbs of the image of the deity worshipped.
- Avagunthana Closing the fingers held straight and turned downward, waving the hand round the image.
- 8. Dhenu Putting the right small finger over the right ring-finger, intertwining the former with the left ring-finger, the left small finger, as it is, to be intertwined with the right ring-finger, the left finger to be passed over the left middle finger and the left thumb, and to be intertwined with the right hand middle finger brought to the right side of the left index finger and the right hand index finger to be joined with the left hand middle finger.
- 9. Mahámudrá Intertwining the thumbs of both hands and holding the other fingers straight.

The Mudrálak sana (Deccan College MS. No. 291 of 1887-91) deals with Mudrás appropriate for the worship of Visnu and other gods.

Some other well-known Mudrás are Samkha, Abhiti (Abhaya), Ankusa, Trikhandá, Khecari, Yoni. A few Mudrás, mentioned in the Nityásodasiká, indicate the purpose for which they are employed; e.g., Sarva-samksobhakarini (causing agitation to all), Sarvavidravani (causing all to run away), Akarsini (attracting others), Sarvavesakári (causing epilectic giddiness or demoniacal possession to all) Unmádini (causing lunacy).

The origin of Mudrás may be traced to the art of dancing in which various hand-poses were used. Bharata's Nátyasástra (c. 4th. cent. A.D. according to some) is the earliest extant dramaturgic work to describe (Chap. ix) various poses of the hands and fingers.

Not only Hindu Tantra, but also Buddhist Tantra deals with Mudras. The Àrya-mañjusrimñlakalpa names and defines 108 Mudrás.

Waddell describes¹⁸ nine Mudras practised in Tibet by the Lamas. Burgess mentions¹⁹ the following nine Mudras²⁰ which slightly differ from Waddell's description:

- Bhúmisprs or Bhúmisparasa²¹ An attitude of Sákya Buddha (making the earth a witness)
- Dharmacakra (Teaching attitude)
- Abhaya (blessing) The left hand is open on the lap, the right hand raised in front of the chest with the fingers and thumb half extended and with the palm facing forward.
- Jnana (Dhyána?) or Padmasana (posture of contemplation).
- Vara or Varada²² Right hand hanging down over the knee, the palm turned outward symbolising charity.
- 6. Lalita (Enchanting).

- 7. Tarka Right hand raised to the chest and slightly constricted.
- 8. Sarana (Of refuge or protection).
- 9. Uttarabodhini (Pose of highest perfection).

It is, perhaps, not an accidental coincidence that both Hindu and Buddhist Tantras mention nine common Mudrás. Their number is nine in both, though their names vary.

In some cases, the term mudrá appears to mean Yogic posture of the body. Two such mudras are very important. One is Khecari, and the other Yoni. These have been described in Glossary.

The Jainas also had Mudrás. They had two works²³ on the subject, called Mudrávicára describing 73 Mudras and Mudravidhi describing 114.

Yantra is another essential item in Tantric rite. Sometimes also called Cakra, it is diagram or figure engraved, drawn or painted on metal, stone, paper or other materials. The difference in the application of Mandala and Yantra is that, while the former may be employed in the worship of any deity, the latter is appropriate for the worship of a particular deity or employed for a particular purpose.

The Kulárnava derives Yantra from the root of yantr. At another place, it states that yantra is so called as it saves the worshipper from Yama or God of Death and goblins and other dangers. Again, it says that yantra is so called as it removes yantranas or pains arising from such faults as love and anger.

This Tantra states (vi. 85) that yantra is a development or product of mantra. The Kaulavalinirnaya holds that worship without a yantra is futile. Some works, e.g., Merutantra (XXXIII. 13) evolved a yantra-gayatri. It appears that yantra was designed to facilitate the concentration of the mind. Yantra is regarded as the body of the deity.

The following are some of the well-known Tantras which deal with yantras.

Prapañcasára (Patalas 21, 34), Saradátilaka (vii. 53-56, XXIV), Kámakálavilása (VV.22., 26, 29, 30, 33), Nityásodasikárnava (I. 31-43), Nityotsava (p.p.6.64-65), Tantraraja-tantra (II.44-51, viii. 30 ff. xxxiii), Abhirbudhnya (Chaps. 23-26), Mantramahodadhi (20th Taranga), Kaulajnana-nirnaya (X), Kaulavalinirnaya (iii. 105-135), Meru (Prakasa 33), Mantra-maharnava (Uttarakhanda, Taranga 11).

Yantra, drawn on cloth, leaf, stone, metal, etc., is a symbol or geometrical figure representing a deity. It is conceived as the body or abode of a deity. In some cases, it is taken to represent mental faculties or pure consciousness, and microcosm of the human body.

Some yantras are prescribed for malevolent purposes. For example, the Sáradátilaka (vii. 58-59) prescribes an Agneyayantra to be drawn on a garment gathered from a pile in a cemetery and buried near the house of his enemy for the latter's destruction. Two yantras for the destruction of the enemy are described (xxiv. 17-18, 19-21). The Prapañacasára (xxxiv. 33) provides a yantra for rousing passion in a woman, and making her run to the person concerned. Some other Tantras, dealing with yantra, are the Gandharva, (vii), Matrkabheda (xii. 6 ff), Kularnava (vi, xvii), Saktisarngama, Tara, xiii. 203, LL2, Purascaryarnava, (vi), Tantrasara of Krsnananda, Saundaryalahari (xi).

Besides the worship of yantras, there is provision (e.g., Tantrarájatantra, Patala 8, verses 30-32) for wearing them on the head, arms, neck, waist or wrist.

A very interesting Yantra is that called Sri. It symbolises creation. There is a central downward-pointing triangle which is red. There are several interwoven triangles, four male pointing upward, and four female pointing downward. Their interpenetration results in circuits of lesser triangles, which appear to show the subdivision of the original creative energies into more definite forces. There are outer circles and rings of lotus-petals symbolising the unfolded beauty of the world. Thus, all the different stages of the creative process appear to be at one place.

For various meanings of the term Yantra, see Glossary.

The term Nyása is derived from the root as (to cast), preceded by 'ni', and literally means placing or depositing in or on something.

According to the Kulárnava, Nyasa is so called because, in it, the riches that are acquired in a righteous way are deposited, placed with persons whereby all-round protection is got. So, by the ritual touch of the chest and other limbs with the fingertips and the palm of the right-hand along with mantras, the worshipper can act fearlessly in the midst of bad people and becomes like a god. The Jayákhya-samhitá (Patala xi. 1-3) also expresses a similar idea.

Nyása is an important part of Tantric rites. It means the mystical sanctification of the several parts or limbs of the body with mantras.

It has been dealt with, inter alia, in the following Tantras:

Jayákhya-samhitá (Patala XI), Prapañcasára (vi) Kularnava (iv. 18 ff), Sáradátilaka (iv. 29-41, V. 5-7), Mahánirvána (III. 41-43, V. 113-118) Gandharva-tantra (ix. 2), Krsnananda's Tantrasara P.93, Taratantra II.3, Tarrsakti-sudharnava V.p. 169, Purascaryarnava xii, p. 1166. Some of the well-known Nyasas are Hamsanyasa, Pranavanyasa, Matrkanyasa, Mantranyasa, Karanyasa, Anganyasa, Pithanyasa. Each of these is accompanied by a mantra. For example, in Anganyasa, one has to recite the mantra om hrdayaya namah, om Sirase svaha, etc.

Six kinds of Nyásas are applied in regard to Vidyás, Káli, Tárá, etc. In Mátrkányása, which is two-fold according as it is antah (internal) or bahih. The Sakti letters (Matrkas) are to be externally felt on the head (RSI), face (Chandas), rectum (Bija), legs (Sakti) the entire body (Kilaka).

The Mahánirvána (V. 176-178) specifies the limbs on which there should be Nyása of the letters of the alphabet. This is prescribed also in the Sáradátilaka (V. 58). Rághavabhatta's commentary on V. 401. of the same work quotes verses laying down how each letter is to be meditated upon. Woodroffe (Principles of Tantra, pp. LXXI-LXXVII) compares Nyasa with the Christian practice of making the sign of the cross.

SAVA-SADHANA24

Some Tantras prescribe Sava-sadhana. The Kaulavalinirnaya (xiv. 75-260), Tárábhakti-sudhárnava (ix. pp. 345 ff.) and the Kuacudamani (vi. 19-28) etc., dal with it. Among Bengal Tantras, the Tantrasára to Krsnananda describes it.

The Kaulaváli describes it as follows :

The devotee should go to a cemetery or some other lonely spot after the first watch of the night, and secure a corpse. The dead body should be of a young handsome warrior, killed (not by the devotee) in battle. He should wash the corpse, offer worship to it and to Durga, and repeat the mantra om durge durge raksani sváhá. If the devotee is not scared by terrible sights that he may see, he secures mantrasiddhi after a long procedure. It is stated that mantrasiddhi is possible by savasádhana even in a single night.

Cakrapúja²⁵

It means worship in a circle. Cakra-puja may be briefly described as follows. The Devi is represented in a Yantra. There should be a leader of the Cakra. Only persons of the Vira state are to be admitted, and those of the Pasu type are to be excluded. The women, who assemble, should put off their inner upper garments in a receptacle. Each of men, who assemble, should secure a female companion for that night by lot, i.e., by taking a lady's bodice out of those contained in the receptacle. Thus, promiscuous sexual inter-course was allowed in a Cakra.

It is ordained (e.g., Kulárnava, xi. 79, 84, 85) that the activities in a Cakra must never be disclosed; these should be kept a secret like the pregnancy of one's mother caused by her paramour.

The Mahanirvana provides for Bhairava and Tattvacakras.

Ways to liberation

The Páránanda-sútra (Gosed; pp. 1-3, 13) states three paths for the attainment of the goal. These are:

- (i) Daksina prescribed in the Veda, Smrti and Purana.
- (ii) Vama declared in Agamas. It is so called either because women (Vâmá) play an important role in it or because it is a crooked way practised secretly. It is of two kinds, viz., Madhyama in which all the makaras are resorted to, and Uttama in which one madya, maithuna and mudra are used.
- (iii) Uttara shown by the word of the veda and the Guru who is Jivanmukta.

A few more paths are suggested by some Tantras. The Kularnava (ii. 7-8) mentions six paths, viz., Vaisnava, Saiva, Daksina, Vama, Siddhánta, Kaula; each succeeding is higher than the preceding one.

The above paths or modes (ácára) are divided into three groups according as the aspirant has Divyabhava (divine propensities), Várabháva (heroic mental state) or Pasubhava (animality). The mode, prescribed for Divyabháva, is Kaulácara. Those for Virabhava are Siddhántácára and Vamacara. The modes for Pasubhava are Vedácára, Vaisnavácára, Saivácára and Daksinácára.

Tantra recognises Jivanmukti (liberation while alive). For example, the Páránanda holds (p. 9, sutras 3-8) that it consists in visualising the deity worshipped. A person, who is liberated in life, is not affected by Karman, meritorious or sinful.

Bhakti in Tantra

The Vaisnava works, particularly the Bhágavata, lay stress on bhakti as a means to the highest goal. The Bhágavata (vii. 5.23-24) states nine-fold bhakti towards Visnu. These are sravana (hearing), kirtana (reciting names), smarana (remembering), padasevana á (shamposing the feet) arcana (worship), vandana (salutation), dasya (service), sakhya (friendship), átma-nivedana (self-surrender).

Some Tantras also recognise nine modes of bhakti. For example, the Rudrayámala (xxvii. 103-104) mentions nine modes with slight variations. It provides manana for sravana, dhyána for sakhya. It may be noted that the Tantra leaves out the word Visnu, mentioned in the Bhagavata in this connexion.

The Páránandasútra (pp. 6-7, Sutras 35, 38, 59) accords to bhakti the highest position among the means to the goal. It says bhoga-svargápavarga-kámksinám bhaktir eva ekah panthah; bhakti is the sole means for those who desire enjoyment, heaven and salvation.

Yuganaddha

It is a symbol pointing to the unique harmony and union of masculinity and femininity, of blunt truth and symbolic truth of intellect and humanity.

It represents the union of Male and Female principle; it is the non-dual state of the unity of Súnyatá and Karuna according to Buddhist Tantra²⁶.

In his book, entitled Yuganadha, Guenther, on the basis of Buddhist Tantras, tries to show that Buddhist Tantrikas look upon a life as a whole. They do not advocate excessive indulgence in passions nor do they teach rejection of or escape from life. They require complete reconciliation to the facts of life. The sexual aspect, found in Tantras, is a corrective against the one-sided intellectualism and rationalism of philosophy which is not capable of tackling the problems of day-to-day life.

Number of Tantras

There is no consensus about the number and names of Tantras. According to the Nityásodasikarnava (i. 22), the number runs to millions. The orthodox scholars give the number as a lac or more. In some Tantras, the number is 64²⁷. As we have stated in connexion with the classification of Tantras, each of the three geographical divisions, called Rathakranta, Visnukranta and Asvakranta, is believed to have produced 64 Tantras. Tantras of the Yamala class are usually regarded as eight in number; the names differ in different sources.

According to the Sammoha Tantra, Cina has 100 main Tantras and 7 subsidiary ones, Dravida has 20 principal and 23 secondary works. Kerela has 60 chief works and 500 subsidiary ones. According to the Nihsvasa-tattva-samhita, the Agamas are 18 in number. The Meru-tantra tells (i. 21) us that Siva composed 108 Tantras.

The Varahitantra mentions 54 Tantras.

The Siddhanta Agamas of South India number 28; there is difference of opinion regarding their number and extent.

The number of Pancaratra Agamas is generally stated to be 108. Their number is actually over 200. The number of Vaisnava Tantras is 25, according to the Agnipurana. The Kaulavali-nirnaya enumerates numerous Tantras (1-7) including Yamalas (2-14).

According to the Tantraloka (i. 18) of Abhinavagupta, there are groups of ten, eighteen and sixty-four Saiva Tantras.

Sákta Sect — a general view

The worshippers of Sakti as the Female Energy are called Sáktas. Sakti has been conceived in different forms, of which Kali²⁸ is the commonest. The other well-known forms are Tripurá, Lohita, Sodasiká, Kámesvari.

Sakta works and Tantra have many things in common. The fundamental difference is that while, in the former Sakti or Devi is worshipped as the highest divinity, in the latter the worship is not confined to Devi. Tantra may be agnostic, Vedantic or Samkhyaite in its philosophical approach.

That the Sáktas developed a philosophy having a great impact on the society is proved, inter alia, by the fact that the Váyupurána (104.16) includes it among the philosophical schools. There are evidences to prove that the Sákta cult prevailed long before the eighth century A.D., especially in Bengal and Assam, the two strongholds of Tántric religion. Eight Sákta Ksetras are mentioned in Bárhaspatya sátra (iii. 123-124).

The word Sakti occurs several times in the Rgveda (e.g., iii. 31.14; v. 31.6, vii. 20.10, x. 88.10), but it is conceived as the Energy of gods and not as a separate creative principle. R. V. v. 47.4 (Catvára im bibharti, etc.) is interpreted as referring to the Sákta doctrines. But this interpretation is not acceptable to all.

Some Upanisads mention Sakti. For example, the Svetasvatara says that the Brahmavadins had a vision of Sakti as not different from God. It holds (vi. 8) that Brahman possesses the highest Sakti which is variously heard: Svåbháviki jñánabalakriya (natural knowledge, strength and action). In this connexion, it may be added that P. V. Kane points out that Upanisads like Bhávanopanisad, were fabricated by the Saktas to prove the antiquity of their cult.

Like Tantra the Sákta cult provides for both yoga and bhoga. In the manner of Tantra it prescribes worship with pancatattva, and holds that there is no means of greater happiness and liberation than the fifth tattva or sexual intercourse.

Sakti is conceived as the primordial principle of all activities in the universe. The basic doctrine is that God is one. He is to be conceived as mother as well as destroyer. Sakti is generally called Devi who has been eulogised in some Puranas, e.g. Vámana (18-19), Devibhágavata²⁹ (iii. 27), Brahmánda containing Lalitá-máhátmya, Matsya (xiii. 24-54), Kúrma (i. 12). The Devimahatmya of the Markandeya-purana is one of the principal works of the cult. In the Puranas Sakti is variously designated as Mahisamardini, Kundalini, Durga, Katyayani, Candi, etc.

The Vedánta doctrine that Brahma is one and that he has all powers might have suggested the unity and omnipotence of Sakti.

It is interesting to note that, in the $K\acute{u}rma$ (1.12.261-262), certain Sástras, including certain classes of Tantra, are condemned. It is stated that the Sástras, noted below, which are opposed to Veda and Smrti, were propogated by Devi in order to confuse the people, and were based on ignorance. These Sastras are Kápála, Bhairava Yámala, Vána, ¾rhata.

Like the followers of Tantra the Saktas also developed certain debasing practices. For example, the Kaulavali-nirnaya declares that all women are fit for intercourse to a Sakta excepting the wives of his Guru and of those Saktas who have attained the state of Vira. It goes (viii. 223-225) so far as to allow incestuous sexual union. The Kalivilasa-tantra (x. 20-21) allows illicit sexual relation to a Sakta provided he does not continue up to the emission of semen; thus he can have mastery over supernatural powers.

Like Tantra again Saktasastra declares that the principal aim of a Sakta should be to realise his identity with Yantra, Mantra, Guru and Devi.

You, the omnipotent one, are indeed Sakti of the world. You are the cause of everthing. You sport in the web of delusion created by you, as an actor in the dramatic representation created by himself.

A popular Sákta superstition is that jackals (Sivá) are Sakti incarnate; offerings of food to them are supposed to be highly meritorious.

Sáktavidyás (mantras) are divided into three classes³⁰, viz., Kadi (KA, E, I, LA, HRIM), Hádi (HA, SA, KA, HA, LA, HRIM) and Sádi (SA, KA, HA, LA, HRIM).

Sáktism developed in Bengal to a great extent. In the Sakta Tantras of this region the main idea is that Sakti is the pivot round which Sakta philosophy revolves. She is both manifest (Vyakta) and unmainfest (Avyakta). Everything from the principle of Mahat up to the minutest atom is her creation. Creatures are a narrow manifestation of Sakti by worshipping which they can realise Mahasakti, and thus realise the Supreme principle and ultimately attain Sivahood. The main object of Saktisadhana is to realise the identify of Jiva and Siva.

It should not be supposed that the worship of Female Energy was an isolated phenomenon in India or an absolutely novel conception in Tantra.

Researches into the social conditions among the primitive people, including the tribes of India, reveal the domination of females³¹. This appears to be projected into the conception of the superiority of Mother Goddess. In many primitive societies, the priestess is regarded as superior to the priest. Among such people, descent is traced through the mother, and the right to property devolved through her.

In the religion of the Semites of old, the superiority of the mother was recognised. Frazer thinks³² that, in ancient times, it was widespread throughout Asia Minor. He points out³³ that the ancient system of mother-superiority lingered on in Egypt down to the Roman times (4th-5th century).

Briffault is, perhaps, right³⁴ in thinking that, with the progress of agriculture, the matriarchal status of women as owners and heiresses of cultivable lands and also as priestesses functioning in magic rites for securing fertility, was bolstered up.

Thompson thinks that, in the hunting stage, while men were engaged in killing beasts and birds, the comparatively softer, yet essential, work of food-gathering was entrusted to women. So long as the society depended for food on garden-tillage, it was within the sphere of women's activity. He thinks that, with garden-tillage replaced by field cultivation and the hoe by the cattle-driven plough, the work of agriculture became the exclusive work of men. Thus, matria-potestas yielded place to patria-potestas. Traces of woman-superlority still linger on in such tribal institutions as matrilocal marriage, avunculate, female dominated religion, etc.

He holds that all industries in ancient times were home industries. As such, it is but natural that women played a vital role in them. With the growth of large-scale industries men, perhaps, took the leading part in industries. As in the fields, so in the factories they figured without their female partners or with them playing only the role of assistants and associates.

In another context, we have discussed the wide prevalence of the cult of Mother Goddess in various countries.

In India, the relics of Indus Valley Civilisation reveal female figurines which, perhaps, testify to the idea of Sakti as the Supreme Deity.

In the Sámkhya philosophy, as we shall see, Prakrti, the female principle, is all-important; She is Pradhána. Thus, she appears to be a reflex of the dominant female in the matriarchal system.

The domination of females is undoubted in the Stri-rájyas (women's kingdoms) in ancient India. Such kingdoms flourished mainly in the north-eastern and north-western borders of India. Megasthenes, followed by Arrain and other, refer³6 to the female rulers of the Pándya country in the south. Traces of mother-superiority are still found in the region concerned. Such a country in the Kumaon-Grahwal region is referred to by Hiuen Tsang³7 (7th cent. A. D.), in the Garuda Purána (ch. IV) and Bilhana's (11th-12th cent.) Vikramánkadevacarita (xviii. 57). The Chinese pilgrim-traveller also records³8 a Stri-rajya near Lángala in modern Baluchistan. Varáhamihira (5th-6th cent. A.D.) appears to refer to it. (Brhatsamhita, xiv. 22) as located in north-western India. Woman's rule prevailed in the Nu-wang tribe of Tibet³9.

Vátsyáyana speaks of Stri-rajyas among the Vahlikas⁴⁰.

In the Mahabharata (VIII. 45.13), there is the practice of a man's inheriting the property of his maternal uncle.

Besides literary references to matriarchy and the superiority of females, we find the survival of this system among some people, particularly the tribes, even today. Among such tribes, the prominent are the Khasis of Meghalaya and the Garos⁴¹. Among the former, the priest (Lyngdoh) acts as the agent of the priestess⁴².

Among the Náyárs, the joint family (tarwad) is constituted by a woman and her daughters. A woman is allowed to have more husbands than one⁴³.

Inheritance through the mother is widely in vogue in South India⁴⁴ and Madhya Pradesh⁴⁵. So are matrilocal marriage and residence.

Ehrenfels is of the opinion that female domination in Indian society was wider and deeper than in any other country of the world. According to him, this system received a jolt, and was overthrown through the institutions of hypergamy, child marriage and Sati (burning of widows). The system was, however, so deep-rooted that, despite the above unfavourable factors, it survived among the aborigines and also some people of the civilised society, as shown above⁴⁶. The great importance attached to women in Tantra, reminds one of the above system.

The cult of virgin goddess is, perhaps, the result of female superiority. The worship of Kanyákumári in the extreme South of India, whose shrine is mentioned in the Periplus, and the provision of Kumári-pújá in Tantric rites are reminiscent of the practice of looking upon women as powerful.

It may be added that the Aryans of hoary antiquity appear to have attached greater importance to women than to men. If we go deep into the significance of the words pitá and mátá, the designations of the two principal persons in the family, we find that the latter appears to have been more important. She is ma-ta, i.e., nirmata (the builder of the child) or one who measures the food for her child⁴⁷. Thus, her function is vital, whereas pita (from root pa- to protect or rear) is so called as he protects or fosters the child (palanat pita)⁴⁸; thus, the word does not hind at the father's role as the maker of the child.

In the Veda (R. V. X. 85-46), a bride is exhorted by the husband to be samrájňi in his house, having to look after her father-in-law, mother-in-law, brother-in-law and sister-in-law.

In the Manu-smrti (ii. 45), the oldest and the most authoritative of the Smrtis, the mother is stated to excel a thousand fathers in point of honour.

All these attitudes seem to testify to the tradition of female superiority in the then society.

Sákta philosophy, in course of time, developed subtleties, and became complex. The basic elements of this philosophy are the following 36 Tattvas: Siva, Sakti, Sadasiva, Isvara, Vidya, Máyá, Avidya, Kala, Raga, Kala, Niyati, Jiva, Prakrti, Manas, Buddhi, Ahamkára, Panca-tanmátra, Dasendriya, Pañcabhúta.

In Sakta philosophy, Siva is the Supreme principle. Though he is Advaita (non-dualistic), yet He is coupled with inherent Sakti. He is beyond all gunas, without desire, without vibration; yet He is Saccidananda (Sat — existent, Cit — consciousness, Ananda — bliss). He is Nirvisesa (without attributes). Sakti is the inherent power of Siva, which underlies creation. Sakti is the manifestation of Siva as the rays are of the sun, the burning power of fire and the effulgence of a jewel.

The internal parináma of Sakti consists in Sadásiva, Isvara, Vidya, etc. From Máyá, (illusion) the external parináma of Sakti, emanate the Tattvas up to five gross elements (pañcabhuta). The Tattvas from Maya to Niyati partake of the nature of both external and internal parináma.

Jiva, dependent on Máyá, Avidya, Kálá, Rága, Kála and Niyati, is nothing but a part of Siva, but covered by Kañcukas (fetters) and Mala (impurity). The gross body of Jiva is the bhoga-deha the basis of which is Prakrtí. Thus, everything, from Siva to Jiva or created beings is dependent on Sakti. The manifestation of Sakti is sometimes dormant, sometimes like a dream, and at other times, grossly active, Sakti resides within the body as Kundalini.

Sákta sádhaná has Jiva at the centre. As stated above, Jiva is Siva, but covered with Máyá, subject to attachment and fate and full of suffering. Sákta-sádhaná aims at the redemption of Jiva from the clutches of suffering and establishing him in everlasting bliss and consciousness.

In order to reach this goal, the characteristics of the body of Jiva have been analysed. It is a microcosm with a legion of veins and arteries which go on acting, and the internal vital breath continues to blow incessantly. There are, within the body, six lotus-like Cakras and one in the head; all these are stringed by the central nerve, Susumna which has one nerve on each side, the left one being called Ida and the right Pingala. The Supreme Siva resides in the sanctum sanctorum of the Sahasrara lotus at the apex. Kundalini being awakened, residing at the Múládhára Cakra at the base, begins the upward march; it gradually penetrates the Cakras, and finally reaches the Sahasrara where she is united with Siva resulting in perfect inexpressible bliss, the enjoyment of which is the summum Bonum of the aspirant's devotional life.

Sákta philosophy advocates parináma-váda according to which the unmanifest Sakti Herself is evolved as the manifest objects. In the Nityasodsikarnava (vi. 16), it is stated ramate svayam avyakta tripura khyatimagata or vyaktimagata.

The doctrine is also called Satkáryaváda, i.e., the effect inheres in the cause as the sprout in a seed.

According to Vedánta, the world is unconseious illusion. The illusion created by Brahman, who is the conscious principle, is false and devoid of consciousness.

According to Tantric philosophy, however, the power, Máyá, of the conscious Brahman, is also conscious as there is identity of the Saktimán and his Sakti.

The doctrine of Sakti-parináma is also called Àbhasavada; it is the manifestation of objects by the conscious principle which itself remains unaffected.

This Sádhaná is intimately connected with the Tattvas by crossing or obliterating which the aspirant is established in the ultimate Tattva of Siva.

The Sádhaná of Sakti has stages and its mode varies according to the propensity and capacity of the devotees. Equal place is accorded in it to Jñána (knowledge), Karman (action) and Bhakti (devotion), which are, in fact, rolled into one. Starting with Bhakti, it requires the aspirant to act in the prescribed manner and, finally he rests with the knowledge of non-duality of Siva and Sakti. As stated in the introduction, depending on the nature and capability of the aspirant, there are seven modes (ácára). Of the aspirants, one with Divyabhava is the best. He is a votary of knowledge, (jñánayogin). For his Sádhaná, there is no need of an image, nor of external rites. Absorbed in Antaryága, he meditates upon Mother Goddess whose manifestation is the entire world. Panca-makara in it does not mean the gross substances, but has a spiritual significance, as has been indicated in the introduction. The attitude of such an aspirant has been declared as the best (sarva-bhávottama).

The Sádhaná for one, who is endowed with Virabháva, consisting in external rites and fast, etc., is extremely difficult as the aspirant has to face severe tests. Such a person resorts to the five Makaras in their gross forms, and Sadhana is performed in a cemetery or other lonely spots. If necessity arises, the person concerned resorts to the six Tantric acts of Márana, Uccatana, etc. Such a Sádhaná, as the name Vira suggests, befits one who is, indeed, a Vira, strong, fearless, self-controlled, activated by the inculcation of the power of mantra.

The worship of Tripura, Tripurasundari or Mahatripurasundari, who is identified with Para-samvit (Supreme Consciousness) which again is conceived as Brahman who is beyond the 36 Tattvas, is twofold, viz.,

Antaryága (internal) and Bahiryága (external). She is worshipped in three forms, viz., Sthula, Suksma and Para. In the first form, she has anthropomorphic traits, and is accessible to the eyes and hands of those possessed of mantrasiddhi. The second one, consisting in mantra, is comprehended by the ears and speech of the holy persons. The third form is comprehended by the mind of holy devotees.

The first and the third are sarupa and arupa respectively. The second one partaking of the nature of both is not considered separately.

In the external worship, different symbols of the Goddess are worshipped. Of these, Srlyantra or Sricakra is the best.

Sákta-sádhaná has been more hated than understood by the common run of people. Devotees of low propensities and vile mentality use it as a pretext and cover for self-indulgence. Hypocritical gurus exploit the naive and the gullible, and earn a living. Generally, Tantric rites are looked down upon by people, especially those who are staunch followers of the orthodox. Brahmanical religion, as encouraging levity, lecherousness and debauchery. In reality, however, Sakti-sadhana aims at the elevation of man from animality to; a spiritual height through the restrained enjoyment of worldly pleasures and not by their ascetic denial. Irrespective of caste or colour, everybody, male or female, can take to it to appease his or her spiritual hunger, while living a worldly life and not renouncing it. It synthesis all modes of approach, and aims at the single object of realising non-dualism so that there is no scope for communal discord or disharmony and narrowness.

There are pitfalls in this Sadhaná. But one who, resorting to a true guru, strives unwaveringly for the goal, can enjoy the bliss and the wealth of detachment by securing which one can do good to other people.

This topic may be concluded with a quotation of Sri Arabindo's conception of Sakti, as expressed in this celebrated work, The Mother. Says the savant:

Each of the worlds is nothing but one play of the Mahasakti of the system of worlds, who is there as the cosmic Soul and Personality of the transcendent Mother. Each is something that she has been in her vision, gathered into her heart of beauty and power and created in her, Ananda.

Science in Tantra49

Many think that Tantras are merely speculative works, But, a careful study of Tantras reveals that some scientific elements are there. Some siddhis (powers) include seeing and hearing from afar, medical treatment from a great distance; these are stated to be attainable through Sádhaná. It seems that these siddhis could accomplish what can be achieved now-a-days by means of television, radio, teletherapy, etc.

In Tantra, each deity has a particular colour. The Buddhas, in the Dhyana posture, are represented as having some colour or other. In regard to creation, Buddhist Tantra advocates the theory of nihilism (Súnyaváda). From this fact as well as from their knowledge of colours some think that Tantra-writers were aware of the light and its diffusion in the primordial state of the material world.

What is called cosmic ray was not, perhaps, unknown to them. The scientific basis of Kundalini is recognised by some Tantras, e.g., Matrkábheda Tantra, lay down a process of preparing mercury ash.

To medical science the contribution of Tantra appears to have been considerable. According to Tantra, the human body, the microcosm, is all important. To keep it fit not only various asanas were devised. Various drugs were also discovered for preservation of youth and virility. Medicines for curing diseases, rejuvenation and counteracting poisons were also invented.

The Tantric Rasa school of alchemy played a great role in the society.

The very names of the eight principal divisions of Ayurveda, viz. Salyatantra, Salakyatantra, Kaya-cikitsa-tantra, Bhutavidyatantra, Kumarabhrtya-tantra, Agada-tantra, Vaji-karana-tantra, Rasayana-tantra, appear to hint at their Tantric origin.

These mean respectively healing of wounds and diseases of lower limbs through surgery, ointments and drugs; healing of wounds and diseases of upper limbs; healing of external and internal diseases of a general nature; dealing with mental diseases; dealing with diseases of children; toxicology; prescription for enchancing sexual vigour, etc.; science of chemical preparations for medicines and other purposes.

Some texts, dealing with Rasayana, still survive white others are known only from references.

A type of Tantric treatment, called Avadhautika-cikitsa, still survives in some parts of India.

Causes of Composition of Tantras⁵⁰

Several factors lead to the composition of Tantras. The Vedas, followed by other works, were too learned for the people at large. The orthodox philosophical systems were too abstruse for them. The ritualistic works prescribed rites and rituals too elaborate and requiring rigorous discipline and meticulous attention to details. The Smrti works denied the right to the performance of important religious rites to Súdras and women. The Buddhists advocated asceticism. The Brahmanical works taught renunciation as the highest ideal in life.

Thus, the need was gradually felt for easier works laying down doctrines more intelligible to common people, prescribing less complicated practices and giving freedom of religious rites to Súdras and women.

The result was the composition of Tantras.

These works hold that the practices and precepts, taught in the Veda, are too difficult for our age. Instead of rigorous asceticism and renunciation, the Tantras allow people to follow their natural propensities like drinking wine, enjoying women, etc. Mukti (salvation) is possible through bhukti (enjoyment). While self-mortification was advocated by the orthodox Sastras, the Tantras laild stress on the preservation of the body and the maintenance of health. In fact, the body was regarded as a microcosm; what is not in the body is not in the universe. The body is the best means of sadhana. Tantra holds that the body contains the highest power which can make one capable of controlling the universal energy.

Literary Value of Tantra

Tantra is partly philosophical, partly ritualistic. So, we cannot expect much literary value in it. But, it must be admitted that Tantra supplied some themes to later writers not only in Sanskrit, but also in vernacular literatures.

In the analysis of human psychology and in the depiction of the condition of human beings, deluded by wrong ideas and subjected to suffering of various kinds, Tantra excites our admiration and pity.

The Sáktánanda-taranginì (I) of Brahmánanda of Bengal beautifully expresses the miserable condition of human beings suffering from sin, attachment to worldly objects and consumed by the fire of hostility or hatred:

pápa-súla-vinirbhinnam siktam visaya-sarpisá / rágadvesanalaih pakvam-mrtyur-asnáti mánevam //

Death devours man who is pierced by the spear of sin, wetted by the clarified butter in the form of the objects of sense and cooked by the fire of attachment and animosity.

No less attractive from the literary point of view are the hint, contained in Tantra, at mystic practices based on the biological relationship of man and woman and the ensuing feeling which beggars description.

Tántric Savasádhana, Latásádhana, human sacrifice, offer of human blood to the goddess, the grotesque and hideous practices of some Tántric sects, etc., have motivated some later writers in their portayal of literary pictures evoking the sentiments of Bibhatsa (disgust) Bhayánaka (fierce) and Adbhuta (marvellous). We have dealt with Tantric elements in literature in a separate chapter.

Poetic beauty flashes at some places of the Tántra literature. For example, the description of the six Cakras like lotuses of varying colours and varying number of petals. Some mudrás and mandalas are artistic both in conception and description. Some Tántric scholars appear to have had poetic ability of no mean order in their description of Kundalini and the thousand-petalled lotus supposed to be within the head. These pen-pictures are beautiful in their use of figures of speech and the mode of expression.

Tantra poetically conceived Idá and Pingalá as the moon and the sun respectively. The following description of Susumna calls up a vivid imagery:

Vidyunmála-vilása munimanasi lasattantu-rupasusúksmá — Resplendent like a garland (or a series) of lightnings it is, in the mind of the sage, extremely slender like a shining thread.

The following description of Kundalini is a piece of fine poetry:

tasyorddhe visa-tantu-sodara-lasat-suksma jaganmohini brahma-dvara-mukham mukhena madhuram sacchadayantisvayam

Samkhavartanibha navina-capalamala-vilasaspada supta sarpasama sivopari lasat-sardha-trivrttakrtih // kujanti kulakundalini ca madhuram mattali-sphutam vacah komala-kavya-bandha-racana bhedati-bheda-kramaih sa mulambuja-gahvare vilapati proddama-diptavolli // Satcakra-nirupana, 11-12.

Above it, the enchanter of the world, shining and slender like a lotus-fibre, having covered the Brahmadvara with its face, lies asleep, like the circular marks on conch-shell and with three and a half coils like a serpent, on Siva. Composing fine poems in various metres, humming sweetly like intoxicated bees and sustaining the life of a creature in exhalation and inhalation, She shines like a series of very powerful lights in the cavity of the lotus in the shape of Můládhára.

Pictorial effect is charming in the description of the Sahasrára which has thousand petals, which is white like the full moon, in which the pollens are beautiful like the newly risen sun, which is decorated with divine trees eternally bearing flowers and fruits.

The following lines graphically present the image of Adyádevi before our minds' eyes:

Meghángim sasi-sekharám trinayanám raktambaram bibhratim pánibhyám ahayam varamca vikasad-raktaravinda-sthitam nrtyantam purato nipiya madhuram madhvika-madyam mahá-kálam viksya vikásitá-nanavarám ádyám bhaje kálikám //

Mahanirvana-tantra, V

(I worship Adya Kali; Her body is like cloud, She is moon-crested, three-eyed, clad in red cloth. In her two hands, there are the poses of boon and freedom fear. Standing on a red lotus, She has Her face laughing at the sight of Mahakala who, having drunk Madhvika wine⁵¹, is dancing before her.)

The following description can compare favourably with a verse of any good poem.

Vahanti sinduram prabala-kavaribhara-timira dvisam vrndair-vandikrtam iva navinarka-kiranam / tanotu ksemam nastava vadana-saundarya-lahari parivaha-srotah saranir iva simanta-saranih // (Saundarya-lahari, verse 44)

(O Goddess, may that parting line of your hair, which looks like the overflowing watercourse of the wave of the beauty of your face, which (i.e., parting line), being smeared with vermilion, it seems as though the morning sun captivated by the darkness in the form of the mass of hairs of the enemy.)

lasat-samkha-cakra-calat-khadga-bhima nadat-simhavaha-jvalat-tungamaulih / dravad daityavarga stavat siddha-samgha tvamevesi durgapi sargadihine //

Prapancasara-tantra, attributed to Samkaracarya

(O goddess, you Durga, too devoid of creation, etc., have a shining conch and a disc, you are fierce with a moving sword, have your lion-mount roaring, your high head is bright, from you the host of demons are running away, a group of Siddhas are eulogising you; you are indeed the Supreme Goddess. A vivid description in the malodious Bhujañga-prayáta metre.

There are also instances of artificial and laboured composition which characterises Sanskrit poetry of the decadent period. While such compositions testify to the learning of the author, these are jejune and as insipid as poetical pieces. In the following lines, every word commences with the letter Ka which is the initial letter in 'Káli' and the first consonant of the alphabet.

Kamalá Káli-darpaghni Kapardisa Krpánvitá, Káliká Kálamátá ca Kálánala-samadyutih /

Tantra Beyond India

We do not know whether Tantra was imported into India or exported from this country to other countries. Tantric influence is, however, clear far beyond the limits of India, China and Tibet are the two most prominent places beyond India, which reveal the influence of Tantra. Several Sanskrit Tantras are preserved only in Chinese and Tibetan translations, the original works being lost. Evidences are available that Tantric philosophers and scholars from India visited the above countries.

Goddess Tárá, in her Buddhist garb, got a niche in the pantheon of Tibet where she is known as Sgral-ma or Dol-ma. Many forms of the deity have been conceived.

The Tárá cult travelled also to China as Sakti of Avalokitesvara. It is interesting to note that, under the pre-Buddhist Taoism and Confucianism, which recognised Mother Goddess as the representative of Yin (Female principle), Avalokitesvara⁵² was transformed into a goddess. By the 7th and 8th century A.D., Tara was completely merged with Avalokitesvara who lost his male character, and was transmuted into goddess Kuanyin of China.

The double form of Tárá became very popular in that country. Gradually Taoist rituals made their way into the Tara Cult and Yinism or Exaltation of the Female Principle in Taoism.

This, in its turn, influenced Indian Vámácára in both its Buddhistic and Hindu forms.

P. C. Bagchi has sought to identify Mahácinatárá with Ekajata⁵³. Siddha Nágárjuna is said to have recovered the Ekajata cult in Tibet.

The description of Ekajatá⁵⁴ is similar to that of Mahácinakrama-tárá.⁵⁵

The Hindu pantheon has the following goddesses corresponding to the above divinities:

Tárá, Ugratárá, Ekajatá, Maha-Nila-Sarasvati.

It should be noted that the dhyanas of these goddesses, occurring in Hindu Tantra, agree verbatim with those found in Buddhist Tantra.

The Sammoha-tantra states that Nila-Sarasvati or Ugratárá was born in the lake, called Cola, on the west of Meru which was a part of Cinadesa.

Bagchi is of the opinion that Cola is, perhaps, to be connected with the Kol or Col, the common word for lake Kul or Col, found with the names of many lakes to the west and north of Tien-shan in Mongolia.

At least four Tantras, viz., Sirascheda, Vinásikha, Sammoha and Nayottara are known from the inscription of Sdak-Kak-Thom to have been introduced into Kambuja (Combodia) about 800 A.D.⁵⁵. The Royal High Priest, Simkaivalya, is stated to have been initiated to Tantra by a Brahmana, named Hiranyadama.

Some other Cambodian inscriptions refer to the Saiva Tantras, Saivagama. An Angkorvat inscription refers to the Paramesvara-tantra.

Images of the Tantric Ganesa have been found in Cambodia.

Mongolia and Japan are some of the other countries where Tantra was introduced. Of the Tantric work, Ganapati-tattva, an old Javanese text only is available.

In the Myson inscription (5th Cent. A.D.) of Champa, there is salutation to Mahesvara and Umá. Images of Devi are found in various places in Champá. She is variously called Matrlingestara, Gauri, Mahadevi, etc.

In Java, images of Siva, both in his calm and furious aspects, have been found. In the Furious aspect, he is called Bhairava. Sakti also appears in two aspects. In the Batavia Museum, there are some images of Mahisamardini. The Sakti of Bhairava or Mahakala is Bhairavi or Mahakali. She is seated on a corpse with human skulls in her neck and head and a garland of human skulls on her body⁵⁷.

The image of Ganesa, found in Java, shows the deity seated on human skulls which leave no doubt about His Tantric character.

Tantra and Timaeus⁵⁸

Certain striking similarities are noticeable between Tantra and Time (Timaeus) of Plato (428-348 B.C.).

Plato speaks to two conduits on two sides of the vertebral column. These appear to be similar to the Tantric Ida and Pingala on the two sides of the Susumná.

Plato conceives the earth as a cube, fire as a triangular pyramid, air as octahedral and water as icosahedral. These appear to correspond to the Tántric mandalas which are square, triangle, two equilateral triangles, one upon the other, crescent noon; ether is represented by a circle⁵⁹.

The above similarities might be accidental coincidence, though the possibility of the one country influencing the other cannot be ruled out. Cultural contact between India and Greece dates back to a period much anterious to Alexnder's invasion (327-26 BC).

Tantra and Christianity

According to C. Eliot, there are some parallelisms between Tantric and Christian rituals. Even in the Anglican Chruch, sprinkling of water is an essential part of the ceremony of baptism; this practice is similar to Tántric Abhiseka. The sign of the Christian cross resembles Tantric nyasa, according to Woodroffe. Baptism includes a formula similar to Tantric mantra. Baptism is supposed to ensure life in heaven, whereas the unbaptised have a dubious future. Similarly, Tantra believes in the attaintment of the spiritual end through physical means. In the Roman Chruch, the rite includes exorcism and the use of salt, oil and lights. This is very much like similar practices in Tantra.

Tantra and Jews

Like the followers of Tantra, the adherents of the Kabbah doctrine of the Jews believe in the mystic power of letters, magic, amulets, the unity of microcosm and macrocosm, etc. These ideas probably passed from India to Egypt whence they spread about the ninth century over Europe. Indo-European contacts, long before the above date, have been proved.

Was Tantra of Foreign Origin ?

India had commercial, cultural and religious contact with many foreign countries, eastern and western, in very remote times.

The relics of Indus Valley Civilisation (C. 3000 B.C.) reveal pottery, etc., which tend to indicate links with Sumeria and Mesopotamia.

India's contact with foreign countries was not a one-way traffic. There was a give-and-take relation between this country and the foreign lands. Besides trade and commerce, Buddhism was a potent factor fostering extraterritorial contacts. In the realm of art and architecture, India had some links with certain foreign countries.

Among the Asiatic neighbors, India came into contact with China, repository of a very old civilisation, particularly in the post-Buddhistic period, but long before Christ.

That Chinese silk was imported into India, and was very popular is amply borne out by literary references.

Buddhism strengthened the ties between India and China.

Contrary to the general impression that Fa-hien was the first Chinese to get himself interested in Buddhism, and to come to India as a place of pilgrimage, several Chinese came to this country before him.

Some Buddhist Sanskrit works, particularly on Tantra, exist only in Chinese translation, the original works being lost.

In connexion with Tantra Beyond India, we have referred to Chinese Taoism and Indian Tantra. The Chinese recognised the Male and Female principles respectively as Yang and Yin as underlying the creation. This naturally led to the sexual rites. The Chinese recognise Hisen (immortality) through certain disciplinary practices which include (1) regulation of respiration, (2) gymnastic technique, (3) sexual technique, (4) alchemical and pharmaceutical technique, etc. These have parallels in Tantra also. For example, the respiratory practice corresponds to Pranayama, the gymnastic technique to hatha-yoga and Káyasádhana. Alchemical technique has close similarity with Indian Tantric system which produced several works on alchemy. The sexual practice, as we have seen, is a very important factor in Indian Tántric rites. While Parallelisms do not conclusively prove borrowing on any side, yet the tradition of Chinese influence on Tantra, Cinacara, etc. seems to be rendered probable by the above similarities.

Besides China, with many other Asiatic countries India came into contact through trade and commerce as well as Buddhism, e.g. Babylon.

The land of Snow, Tibet, became very familiar to India thanks to the adventures of Sarat Das (1849-1917) who, defying the restrictions imposed by the mighty British Raj, and braving the inhospitable weather and the hazardous mountain route, went over to that country, and wrote an illuminating monograph on it.

Centuries ago, cultural and commercial intercourse began between these two countries. Like China, Tibet also looked upon India, the birthplace of the revered Lord Buddha, as a place of pilgrimage. Many Buddhist scholars of India, not only went to Tibet, but also settled there, and wrote many treatises in Sanskrit, especially relating to Tantric Buddhism. The originals of many of such works have been lost; their Tibetan translations survived in the Tanjur. Of the galaxy of Indian scholars, who chose Tibet as the land of their scholarly activities, many were from Bengal. Among the Bengali scholars again, the most renowed was Dipankara Srijnana Atisa (980 or 982-1053 or 1054) who, at the importunate request of the then Tibetan ruler, visited (1042) that land for reforming the delinqunt Tibetan society and the degenerated Buddhist religion there. He lived there till his death.

The deep interest of Tibet in India is reflected in Lama Taranatha's (b. 1573) learned History of Buddhism in India (1607 or 1608 AD).

There is enough of evidence of close Indo-Egyptian contact since pre-Christian times. The Chándogya Upanisad (viii. 8.5) seems to refer to mummification; perhaps it refers to the Egyptian practice. Egyptian colonies were set up in India and Indian colonies in Egypt. Among other things from India, Indian women were a part of the procession of the Egyptian monarch, Ptolemy. The pleasure-boat of Ptolemy Philopatore (221 B.C.) was decorated with Indian gems. The symbols of a wheel and trident over a grave appear to be mute witness to Indian influence. An Indian idol, discovered at Memphis, testifies to the same influence. An important pointer to this fact is an Indian's dedication⁵⁰, to the deity Pan, of a temple of Rhodesia on the desert-route towards the red Sea. Hultzsch informs us that a silver-coin of an Egyptian King, Ptolemy was discovered in a market of Bangalore.

From Pliny we learn that the Egyptian king, Ptolemy II (285-247 B.C.) sent an envoy to an Indian king.

India's contact with foreign countries in Asia, Europe and Africa has been discussed. We shall examine whether or not Tantrism of India was borrowed from external sources.

From what we have seen about Sino-Indian ties, Chinese influence on Indian Tantra is not unlikely.

Woodroffe (Avalon) does not subscribe to the theory that the fundamental principles of Tantra were imported into India from China. The pro-China theorists point out, among other things, that the Rudrayámala, a noted Tantra, mentions China. Buddha (Buddhist doctrine) was established there.

The sage Vasistha is stated to have been initiated to Pancatattva by the Buddha himself. The same story occurs in the Tárátantra where the sage is stated to have brought home the cult of Mahácina-kramácára providing for the worship of Mahácinatárá.

The above story appears, with a little variation, in the Brahma-yamala (Patala I).

Apart from the mythical nature of the story, a few points are significant. It should be noted that Vasistha was a Vedic sage. He at first characterises Cincara rites as Vedavahiskrta (opposed to the Veda). Vasistha's conversion to Tantrism appears to be the symbolical expression of the fusion of Vedism or orthodox Brahmanism and Tantrism.

The reference to Vasistha's performance of Tárá rituals in milacarra, the seat of Kámákhyá, may hint at Assam as the homeland of Tantra. A Vasisthásrama near Gauhati seems to confirm this impression. The words TA-RA, RU-D-RA, used in Tantra, are believed to be loan-words from the Chinese language.

Another argument, though not very convincing, in support of Chinese origin, is that the flower Javá, regarded as highly suitable in Sakti worship, is called Chinese rose.

There is a work called Mahacinacára-tantra.

China may or may not have been the original homeland of Tantra. The fact, however, remains that Tantric doctrines and rites were widely prevalent, for a long time, in the region called Mahacina. It is identified with Arabia Felix (i.e. Aden) by some, with China by others.

The pro-China theorists put forward some more arguments. The mystic syllables hrim, krim, etc., regarded as so important in Tántric practices, show the predominance of the nasal sound, a characteristic of the Chinese language⁶¹. The Tantric diagrams (Yantra, Mandala) remind one of the pictorial writing of the Chinese alphabet. A mode of Tantric Sadhana is called Cinacara which, according to the Taratantra, came from Mahacina.

The Female Energies (Yoginis), mentioned in Brahmanical Tantras, include Lámá⁶². In Tibetan, it is Lhamo or Shedevil. This word has been taken to denote Devi or Sakti. The Jayadratha-yamala mentions twenty-four types of Lamas.

The words Dákini, Hákini, Sákini and Lákini, ⁶³ etc., are also exotic, and appear to point to their foreign origin.

The Sammoha-tantra mentions that Tantric culture of foreign lands like Bhalika (Balkh), Kiráta, Bhota (Tibet), Cina, Mahácina, Párasika (Persia), Airáka (Iraq), Kamboja, Húna, Yavana, Gandhara and Nepala. May be that these countries had some esoteric practices known by Indians as similar to their Tantric practices; borrowing on any side cannot be established.

According to the Tibetan Pag Sam Jon-Zan, Buddhist Tantra originated in Uddiyana⁶⁴. According to B. Bhattacharya, Vajrayana Tantra arose in Uddiyána⁶⁵. This place (also written as Oddiyana, Odryána) is identified by some with Udyana in or near the Swat Valley, while others place it in Kashgarh. Haraprasad Sastri and some other scholars locate it in Orissa, while others think that it was a part of Bengal.

Lokesh Chandra thinks that Oddiyana was the name of Kanci.

In considering the probability of foreign influence on Tantra, we should think of one thing. Of Kámarúpa, Púrnagiri, Uddiyana and Jalandhara, as many as three are situated on long roads connecting India with foreign countries. Kamarupa had been a centre of foreign activities from very remote times.

The location of the above Sakta-Pithas may indicate either foreign influence on Tantra or the passing of Tantric ideas to the foreign countries.

Some scholars think that the conception and worship of Sakti is un-Indian. Thus, Tantra is exotic.

H. P. Sastri, on the basis of a verse⁵⁵ in the Kubjìkámata-tantra, believed that Tantra was of foreign origin. He thought that the idea of Sakti, the worship of which is the kernel of Tantra, was borrowed from Western Asia from where it was brought by the Magi priests of the Seythians.

Woodroffe is of the opinion that Tantra was imported from ancient Chaldea, the region around which, according to him, was Sákadvipa of Indian tradition⁶⁷. In this connection, it is interesting to note that Goddess Nana-Nina, Nansia-Inanna, who was originally the city-goddess of Urk, was, at a later time, identified with the mother of Attis and the Iranian Anatita. The cult of this Goddess spread to India. Her name is found on the coins of the Kusána period. Naina Devi of Kulu Valley, Naini Devi of Nainital etc. are instances of the influence of the goddess of the Nana group.

According to a Tibetan tradition, Tántric principles and practices were introduced by the Buddhist Asanga into India. P. V. Kane does not attach much importance of this tradition based as it is mainly on the History of Buddhism by Taranatha (b. 1573 or 1575) who wrote over one thousand years after Asanga.

Some seek to establish the foreign origin of Tantra on the ground that the exalted position, accorded in Tantra to Guru, has nothing comparable in the Veda and Purána. Others rejects this theory on the ground that a high place of honour is given to Guru in the Nirukta (ii. 4), Svetasvatara Upanisad (vi. 18. 23), Lingapurana, Devibhagavata, etc. It may be noted that the Mahabharata (present from C. 4th cent. A.D. / mentions guru as a highly respectable person.

Towards the end of the 19th cent, and the beginning of the 20th,, many people believed that the cult of Mother Goddess originated in Phrygia and spread in different countries. This led B. Bhattacharya to postulate the theory of the foreign origin of Sakti worship⁶⁸.

After examining the different views, P. V. Kane concludes that certain mystic practices like Kulacara, Vamacara might have been borrowed from outside, but there is no conclusive evidence of Tantra having been borrowed in toto from foreign countries. On the contrary, he thinks that Tantric doctrines migrated to foreign countries, notably China and Tibet. P. C. Bagchi puts forward⁶⁹ some evidences of foreign elements in Tantric doctrines.

Against the view that Tantra was borrowed by India from outside, it may be pointed out that, whereas many Sanskrit Tantras were translated into Chinese or Tibetan, there is no evidence of any Tantric work of these place's having been translated into Sanskrit.

In discussing the question of Chinese influence on Tantra, we should consider the point of similarity between the Taoism of China and the Tantra of India⁷⁰.

The Taoist doctrine revolves round the pivotal concept of yang and yin. The former is the Male positive power of light and heat, and the latter the Female negative power of darkness. The harmonisation of these two powers is believed to enable and cold. These two underlie everything in life and being man to transcend his physical limits, to reach the spiritual plane to acquire preternatural powers and even to achieve immortality in this very life. For acquiring mudane immorality (H Sien), the following practices⁷¹ are necessary:

(i) respiratory exercise, (ii) heliotherapeutic techniques, (iii) gymnastics in the prescribed form, (iv) disciplined sexual intercourse, (v) alchemical and pharmaceutical techniques, (vi) regulated diet.

A comparison of the above with the principles of Tantra clearly reveals close similarity. Tantric philosophy has the central principles of Siva (Male) and Sakti (Female).

Physical and mental disciplines are ordained in Tantra, too, for acquiring superhuman powers, physical fitness and longevity; in fact, Tantra looks upon the human body as a microcosm so that good health is a sine qua non in Tantric Sadhana. The respiratory exercise, advocated in Taoism, has its parallel in Tantric pránáyáma. The heliotherapeutic technique of the former has its Indian counterpart in a series of solar rituals. The gymnastic techniques of Taoism are matched by Tántric Hathayoga and Káyasádhana. Stress on dietary is common to both. The alchemical-pharmaceutical techniques are found in both the systems; in India we have several works on Tantric alchemy. It is significant that, according to tradition, Bhoga (Bogar in Tamil), a Chinese Taoist founded a sect of the South Indian Tantric Siddhas (Sittar in Tamil) who cultivated alchemy vigorously.

The emphasis on sexual practices is remarkably similar in Taoism and Tántrism.

The Sammoha-tantra states that, in China alone, there are one hundred major Tantras and seven minor Tantras (Upatantráni).

Some scholars⁷² have pointed out the similarity of the word Tara, name of an important Tantric goddess, with the name of Astarte or Ishtar or Ashtaroth, the renowned Mother Goddess of Western Asia, though no definite conclusion can be drawn about the influence of one on the other.

In considering foreign influence on Tantra, it deserves notice that, according to the Sammoha-tantra, goddess Nila-Sarasvati approved at a place supposed to have been included in Mongolia⁷³.

It is curious that the ancient religious systems of many countries, especially those systems in which the cult of Mother Goddess played a vital role, reveal beliefs and practices similar, to a great extent, to those in Indian Tantric cults⁷⁴. As instances, we may cite the galli of the Syrian Mother Goddess, Astarte of Hierapolis, the Eleusinian and Phrygian.

Phrygian mysteries, the Dinonysian rites, the Marian secrets, etc. Secret forms of worship, resembling Tántric rites, prevailed in Phrygia, Syria, Lydia, Cappadocia, Pontus and Galatia, in all these regions the cult of Mother Goddess was popular.

Promiscuous sexual intercourse was a feature of a Greek festival in honour of the goddesses, Demeter and Persephone. The rituals connected with the union of Cybele and Attis, Aphrodite and Adonis, Ishtar and Tammuz, Demeter and Zeus, were marked by sex-rites.

Frazer tells us⁷⁵ about the fact that Mother Goddess, symbolising the reproductive energies of nature, was worshipped, under different names, by many peoples of West Asia.

Hogarth describes⁷⁶ how pervasive was the worship of Mother Goddess in Asia Minor and around the Mediterranean.

R. P. Chanda points out⁷⁷ the similarity of Sakti cult with the modes of worship of the female deity in Asia Minor, Syria.

Footnotes

- See Rudrayamala, Uttara II, Kularnava XI, XII XIV, XVIII, Pranatosini II. 2. III.1, VI.4, Kularnava XIII Tantra-raja I. Gandharva VI, XXVI, Saradatilaka II, esp. II. 143-44 (Raghava's comm.), Mahanirvana X.200-01, XV.139 Prapancasara XXXVI,
 - Krsnananda's Tantrasara, p. 3, Kamakhya-tantra IV, Kaulavalinirnaya X, Parasuramakalpasutra X. 75 (Ramesvara's comm).
- See Kularnava, XI, XIV Rudrayamala, Uttara, II Prapancasara XXXVI. 50, Krsnananda's Tantrasara p. 3. Saradatilaka, II 745-50, 153 Tontraraja I. 23-24, Rudrayamala, Uttara II, Kularnava XII Kaulavalinirnaya X Parasuramakalpasutra X.74.
- See Pranatosini II. 4, p. 118, Kularnava, XIV.
- 4. See Saradatilaka IV.1 (Raghava's comm), Pranatosini-II 5, p. 143, Saktisamgama, Kali XI, 29-37.
- Names of some South Indian ladies, not necessarily Tantric Sadhikas, end in — amba, e,g, Ramachadramba, Tirumalamba, etc.
- 6. For details, see Sastramulak Bharatiya Saktisadhana (in Bengali), 1st ed., Chap-14.

- See Pranatosini,
- See Glossary.
- 9. See Pranatosini, II.4.
- See Glossary.
- 11. Ibid.
- W. Crooke in Jour of Anthropological Institute. XXVII, p-246.
- B. Thomson, The Fizians, p. 16.
- B. Spencer and F. Gillen, Native Tribes of Central Australia, p. 401.
 - A.W. Howitt, Native Tribes of S. E. Australia, p. 530.
- H. Webster, Primitive Secret Societies, pp. 34-35, 49-66.
- See Chattopadhyay, Lokayata, p. 485ff.; N.N. Bhattacharya, Ancient Indian Rituals, pp. 78-80.
- 17. As described by P. V. Kane,
- The Buddhism of Tibet or Lamaism, 1895, pp. 336-337.
- 19. IA, vols. xxvi, 1987, pp. 24-25.
- See P. V. Kane, Hist. of Dharmsastra, V. pt. 2, 1962, p. 1129.
- 21. See A. Coomaraswamy, Buddha and Gospel of Buddha for its representation in Ceylon (18th cent. AD) Grunwedel, Buddhist Art in India. (Trs. A. C. Gibson), figure 126, B. Bhattacharya, Buddhist Iconography, plate XXVIII; N. K. Bhattashali, Iconography of Buddhist and Brahmanical Sulptures, plate VIII.
- 22. See N. K. Bhattashali, op; cit., plates XX, XXI.
- 23. See P. Shah in Jour. of Oriental Institute, vol. vi, No. 1, pp. 1-35.
- For Sava-sadhana according to Bengali writers, see Chapter on Bengal Tantra.
- See Kaulavali-nirnaya, VIII, 76; Kularnava, xi, 79, 84, 85;
 Tantraja-tantra, XXXV 6.
- 26, Sadhanamata, II, p. 505.

- For instance, the Nitasodasikarnava (I. 13022) mentions 64 Tantras. See Tantra in the lexicon, Sabdakalpadruma. The Saundarya-lahari, attributed to Samkara-carya, the great Advaita philosopher, also mentions 64 Tantras in verse 31.
- 28. See Chapter on Kali.
- Its conception of Sakti is set forth in the following lines (i. 7.42):

tvam saktireva jagatam akhilaprabhava tvannimittam ca sakalam khalu bhavamatram / tvam kridase nija-vinirmita-mohajale natye yatha viharate svakrte natoval //

You, the omnipotent one, are indeed Sakti of the world. You are the cause of everything. You sport in the web of delusion created by you, as an actor in the dramatic representation created by himself.

- 30. See Bahvrcopanisad, p. 62.
- 31. See Ency. of Rel. and Ethics, V. p. 828.
- 32. Adonis, Attis Osiris, p.p. 394-95.
- 33. Ibid, p. 393.
- 34. The Mothers, II, p. 251.
- 35. Aschylus and Athens, pp. 15-16.
- R. C. Majumdar, Classical Accounts of India, p. p. 222-223, 456-458.
- 37. Watters, On Yuan Chwang's etc., I. p. 330.
- 38. Ibid, II, p. 257.
- 39. C. A. Sherring, Western Tibet, p. 338.
- 40. Kamasutra, Vangavasi ed., p. 358.
- 41. A. play-fair, the Garos, p. p. 80 f.f.
- 42. P. R. T. Gurdon, The Khasis, p. p. 62 f.f.
- E. Thurston, Castes and Tribes of Southern India, V, pp. 294-323; L.K.A.K.Iyer, Cochin Tribes and Castes, II, p. 49;
 K. M. kapadia, Marriage and Family in India, pp. 386 f.f.

- Iyer, op. cit, I. pp. 28-29, 76, 98.
 Thurston, op. cit. II. pp. 66, 296, III, pp. 33, 74, etc.; IV, pp. 350, etc., VII, p. 163; H. V. Nanjundayya and Iyer, Mysore Tribed and Castes, II. pp. 3, 7, 108; III, pp. 149, 247, etc.,
- 45. R. V. Russell, Tribes and Castes of Central Provinces of India, II. p. 224; III, pp. 1-39, 299, 394, IV, 65, 187, 408.
- 46. O. R. Ehrenfels, Mother-right in India, pp. 18, f.f., 121-129, 201-4.
- 47. The root ma may means to build or to measure.
- 48. Kalidasa, while referring to the good qualities of a king, says prajanam vinayadhanad raksanad bharanadapi sa pita; for training, protecting and maintaining the subjects, he was their father. (Raghuvansa, i. 24).
- 49. See B. Bhattacharya, Scientific Background of Buddhist Tantras, IHQ, xxxii, Nos. 2, 3. For scientific basis of Kundalini-Yoga, see G. Krishna, Biological basis of Religion and Genius and its intro. by Weizsacker.
- 50. See G. Krishna, op. cit.
- Spirituous liquor, distilled from the flowers of the Madhuka tree or from grapes.
- 52. See S. K. Chatterjee, JAS, I, 1959, p. 180.
- 53. See Sadhanamala, No. 127.

IV, pp. 10, 138, 422.

- 54. Ibid, Nos. 123-128.
- 55. Ibid. Nos. 100, 101.
- See Bulletin de Ecole Francaise....Orient, XV, pp. 70-71;
 B. R. Chatterji, Indian Cultural Influence in Cambodia, pp. 273-74.

For influence of Tantra in the Far East, see P. C. Bagchi's Studies in Tantras; R. C. Majumdar, Inscriptions of Kambuja and JAS, 1950. Also see S. C. Banerji's Sanskrit Beyond India, p. 24.

It is interesting to note that some symbols in the natural caverns of Palaeolithic Europe (C. 20,000 B.C.) resemble those still used by the Tantraikas. See P. Rawlinson,

- Tantra, p. 7. See Bergaignna, Inscription de Campa et der Cambodya, II. 157, 384, 389-92.
- 57. See R. C. Majumdar, Ancient Indian Colonies in the Far East, II, pp. 2, pp. 102-103.
- 58. On the topics, see J. Fillizat, Classical Doctrine of Indian Medicine. pp. 234-35.
- 59. See A. Avalon, Tantraic Texts, Vol. III.
- 60. See Charlesworth, Trade-routes and Commerce of the Roman Empire, p. 59.
- 61. See Matrkabheda-tantra, Patala 12.
- 62. See G, Tucci, JASB NS, LXXVI, 1930, pp. 55ff. Lama (Tibetan Bla-ma) generally denotes scholar. Here, however, it refers to a group of experts who had their own esoteric and mystic practices, it was believed that association with them ensures spiritual progress. These Lamas are also known as Rupika (assuming different forms during intercourse with men) and Cumbika (Kissing men at the very first meeting). See P. C. Bagchi, Studies in Tantras, pp. 49-50.
- 63. These were originally human females, and later on elevated to the status of divinities. For instance, in Western Tibet, a class of sorcerers and witches, called Lha-K'a, led to the rise of the designation Lakini. Sakini is believed to have been derived from Sakas (Scythian) and Dakini from Dags (people of Dagistan).
- 64. See P. C. Bagchi, Studies in the Tantras, pp. 37-40. Grosset, In the footsteps of the Buddha, pp. 109-110; IHQ, XI, pp. 142-144; B. Bhattacharya, Intro. to Buddhist Estoerism, p. 46.
- 65. Intro. to Buddhist Esoterism, p. 46. Sternbach Felicitation Volume, I, p. 491 ff.
- 66. gaccha tvam bhasrate varse adhikarayu sarvatah /
 pithepithe ksetresmin kuru sistimanekadha //

See Nepal Catalogue

P. LXXIX.

67. See A. Avalon, Mahanirvana Tantra, 3rd Ed., p. 560.

- 68. See B. Bhattacharya, Buddhist Esoterism, p. 43 2. See H. P. Sastri, Notices of Skt. MSS, 2nd Series, I, XXXII, p. 152; Prof. S.K. Chatterjee, JAS, I, 1959, p. 113; S. Levi, Nepal, I, p. 346; Woodroffe, Sakti & Sakta, 8th ed., p. 123.
- Studies in Tantra, p. p. 45-55. Also see Bagchi in IHQ, vii, 193 f.f.
- On this question, see S. K. Chatterji in JAS, I. 1959, P. 104; 113; Goez in ABOR, 36, 1955, p.p. 133ff; J. Needham, Science and Civilisation in China, II, pp. 149-51, 425-28.
- 71. See J. Needham, op. cit.
- See N. N. Bhattacharya, History of Tantraic religion, p. 104.
- See our observations in this regard under Tantra Beyond India.
- 74. See N. N. Bhattacharya's book, op-cit, pp. 87ff.
- 75. See Adonis Attis Osiris, pp. 34-35.
- 76. See Ency. of Religion and Ethics, I, p. 147.
- 77. See Indo-Aryan Races, pp. 148-49.

Chapter-3
Vedic Origin of Tántric Practices

Chapter-3

Most of the scholars are of the view that the religion of the Tantras is quite distinct from that of the Vedas. Some occult practices prescribed in the Tantras, in particular, are said to be quite opposed to the path prescribed in the Vedas. Some scholars, on the other hand, hold that the Tántric religion is not different from the Vedic religion. In reality, however, the Tantras are of two types: some are pro-Vedic and some are non-Vedic.1 Accordingly, the Tántric practices are also of two types-pro-Vedic and non-Vedic. This position can be supported by the fact that the philosophical ideas and practices found in some Tantras, such as, the Kúlarnava-Tántra, the Mahdnirvana-Tantra, the Prapañca-sara etc. bear remarkable similarities with those of the Vedas. Some of the Tantras of this group claim to have originated from the Vedas. The Kulárnava-Tantra says that the Tántric path is the essence of the Vedic religion.2 In the view of Bháskararaya, the Tantras contain the essence of the Upanisads. On the other hand, practices prescribed in some tantras, such as, the Yoni-Tantra, the Kumari-Tantra, the Niruttara-Tantra, the Gupta-sadhana-Tantra etc. seem to be very far from those of the Vedas. Particularly, the practices called Cinácáras or practices of cina, enjoined in some Tantras of this group, are in all probability of non-Vedic origin. Of course, the philosophy behind the practices of the non-Vedic Tantras, is not quite distinct from that of the pro-Vedic Tantras, the only remarkable difference between these two being this that in the non-Vedic Tantras greater concession has been given to the sensual pleasures and feelings of the common human beings,3 while in the pro-Vedic Tantras greater emphasis has been laid on the restraint of the common human feelings.

The Vedic religion has two principal paths — (i) Karmakanda or the path of action which is meant for the preservation and smooth running of society and (ii) jñána-kánda or the path of knowledge which leads men to liberation. The former is the path of prayrtti or bhoga i.e. enjoyment; the latter is the path of nivrtti or tyága i.e. renunciation. These two paths are thus contradictory to each other. The karma-kanda advocates the maintenance of society through actions and wordly enjoyments. while the inana-kanda preaches the renouncement of all the worldly enjoyments for the attainment of liberation, the summum bonum of life. Here the problem is: if liberation is to be attained only through renunciation, will the persons performing actions and living household lives be deprived of liberation? The Tantra comes forward to solve the problem by affiliating pravrtti or enjoyment to nivrtti or renunciation. It says that bhoga or wordly enjoyment also can be directed towards liberation. The Kulárnava-Tantra says that in Tantra bhoga re-appears in the form of yoga.4 That means, here bhoga is enjoyined not for bhoga itself, but for yoga or re-union with the Ultimate Reality. For, in Tantra, bhoga or enjoyment appears as bhoga only outwardly, while inwardly it is tyaga or renunciation. Hence the practices prescribed in the Tantra embrace both the elements of enjoyment and renunciation found in karma-kánda and jňánakanda, respectively. And from a comparative study of the Tántric and the Vedic practices, it will be seen that most of the Tántric practices exist in some form or other or, at least, in the form of a seed in the Vedic practices relating either to karma-kánda or to iñána-kánda.

The Tantric practices may broadly be divided into three classes as follows: (1) Some practices are regarded as obligatory or extremely necessary for spiritual uplift and are accepted by people in general with reverence, being neither dreadly nor extremely secret, (2) Some practices are considered as obligatory or highly necessary for the attainment of an enlightened life but are generally looked upon as dreadful or extremely secret. (3) There are still other practices which have little relation or no relation with religion or spiritual uplift and are performed for the fulfilment of some wordly desire or for the gratification of some evil motive.

(1) The first kind of practices include diksa or initiation from some guru or preceptor, japa or muttering of mantras or holy words and sentences, purascarana or muttering of mantras in a great number along with some other performances, homa or sacrifice, asana or physical posture, pránayamá or breathcontrol, dhyana or meditation, dharana or concentration of the mind, yantra-sádhaná or practice on symbolical diagrams, and so on. The most important practice of this kind is that of satcakra-bheda or raising the kundalini power lying at the base of the spinal cord to the brahma-randhra or sahasrara lying at the tope of the same cord. It is held that there are six cakras or meditational centres called muladhára, svadhisthana, manipura, anaháta, visuddhá and ajna within the nerve called susumná running through the spinal cord. These six centres lie parallel to the evacuative organ, the generative organ, the nevael, the heart, the throat and the brow, respectively. The duty of a sádhaka is to raise the kundalini-power lying below múládhára to brahma-randhra or sahasrára through these six meditational centres.

- (2) The principal practices of the second type are those performed with pañca-ma-káras or five things having 'm' as the initial letter in their names. These five ma-káras are: madya or wine, mánsa or meat, matsya or fish, mudrá or eatables and maithuna or sex-enjoyment. Cakra-sadhana or practice performed in an assembly of males and females with the five makaras in a secret place — preferably in a cemetery — at some dark night is also a practice of this type. The practice with meat necessarily brings with it the performance of vali or animal sacrifice including nara-vali or the sacrifice of human beings. Other practices of this type are: svagatra-rudhira-mansasádhaná or the practice of offering blood and flesh out of one's own body, cita-sadhana or practice with the help of the funeral pyre, sava-sádhaná or the practice of meditation by sitting on a dead body in a secret place — preferably in a cemetery at dark night, munda-sádhaná or practice to be performed by sitting on three or five heads of men or of different animals including one of man, and so on,
- (3) Practices of the third type consist mainly of the satkarmans or six kinds of occult practices called abhicáras.

These are: sánti or practices for the cure of some disease or for warding off some evils, vasikarama or practices for enchanting or overpowering some person, stambhana or practices for barring the fruition of some event, vidvesana or practices for creating an inimical relation between persons, ucatana or practices for creating imbalance in some one's mind and marana or practices for killing some person.

Let us now see how far these practices can be traced to the Vedic literature.

1. Diksá or initiation from some guru or preceptor is an essential sacrament of the Vedic tradition. In the Aitareya Brahmana (Ch.1) and the Taittiriya Àranyaka (Ch.2) we find detailed descriptions of the rite of initiation or diksaniyesti. The Chandogya Up. says that it is only a man who acquires proper knowledge from an acarya or preceptor that can repell his ignorance about the self or Brahmans. Japa or muttering of mantras and purascarana or muttering of mantras in a great number are but improvements over svadhyaya or regular study of the Vedas. That homas were regular and obligatory performances of the Vedic people does not require any detail. The Vedic people had to perform the rite of agnihotra daily, in which they had to offer milk to the fire called garhapatya. Besides, there were homas of numerans types.

Practices like ásana, pránáyáma, dhyána or nididhyásana, dháraná etc. were quite familiar to the Upanisadic way of spiritual life. The Upanisads say that meditation should be performed by sitting and keeping the chest, neck and head straight. In a number of places of the Upanisads, we find references to prána and apána, the knowledge of which is essential for pránayáma or breath-control. The Chándogya Up. (1.2) and the Brhadáranyaka Up. (1.3) have shown in detail the superiority of prana over all the sense-organs. The five kinds of prána or vital air are mentioned in the Prasna Up. (3.5). Pránáyáma is clearly referred to in the Katha Up. (2.2.3) and the Svetasvatara Up. (2.9). Dhyana or meditation and dharana or contentration of the mind were the principal practices of the Upanisadic sages. The well-known passage of the Brhadaranyaka Up., srotavyo mantavyo nididhyásitavyah (2.4.5), clearly ordains the practice of mediation. In the later Upanisads like the Yogasikha, the Yoga-cudamani etc. there are plenty references to asana, pranayama, dhyoána, dháraná etc.

Though the Tántric mono-syllabic mantras or sounds called vijas seem outwardly to be meaningless, much importance is attached to them. Taces of such mono-syllabic mantras are found in the Vedas. The use of 'phat' is probably mentioned in the RV and is clearly found in the Vájasaneyi-Samhitá (7.3). The Taittiriya-Aranyaka (4.27) mentions a distinct charm consisting of the sounds 'khat', 'phat' and 'kat'. The Tantric method of symbolising spiritual principles through some letters of the alphabet can clearly be traced to the hinkáropásaná and aumkáro-pásaná of the Chándogya Up. (1.1), and the Asvaláyana Srauta -sútra (1.1).

The practice of worshipping yantras or symbolical diagrams may be traced to the AV and the Taittiriya Àranyaka. The design of the sacrificial altar described in different Bráhmanas, Àranyakas and Súlva-sútras also might have contributed to the formation of the idea of the symbolical diagrams of the Tántric practices. Laksmidhara, while commenting on Soundaryalahari (32), quotes some passages from the Taittiriya-Bráhmana and the Taittiriya-Aranyaka and explains them as referring to the Sri vidya of Tantra. Swami Visnutirtha also quotes some passages from the "Saubhagyakanda" of the AV to show that the idea of Sri vidyá alongwith that of symbolical diagrams is traceable in the AV.

The most important practice of tantra, Yoga, Vaisnavism, Advaita-Vedánta etc. is that of sat-cakra-bheda. In short, all other practices of these schools are meant for this sat-cakra-bheda. It is generally opined that this practice originated in the school of Tantra where from it was borrowed later by the other schools. But a study of the Upanisadic literature shows that the idea of the cakras or meditational centres and the nerve susumna within which the cakras are said to exist was already there in the Upanisads. The Katha Up. (2.1 12,2.3.17) and the Svetasvatara Up. (3.13) say that the Highest Purusa exists in the lotus of the heart in the shape of the thumb. The Chandogya Up. (8.1.1) and the Kaivalya Up. (1.6) refer to the hrtpundarika or heart-lotus.12 The Katha Up. (2.3.16) refers to a nerve originating from the heart and extending up to the tope of the head, which is noting but the nerve susumna. Further, the same Up. (2.2.1) describes the body as having eleven gates which certainly include - besides the nine wellknown passages of two ears, two eyes etc. — múládhára and brahma-randhra, the passages at the base and at the top respectively, of the nerve susumna.13 The AV describes the body as a city having eight cakras or circles and nine gates. Here 'eight cakras' probably include besides the six wellknown cakras - sahasrara lying at the tope of the head and lalan-cakra lying between aina and sahasrara.14 Again, the AV that the spinal cord contains thirty-six letters.15 This corresponds to the Tantric idea of placing the aksaras to the different cakras of the spinal cord. In the wellknown simile of two birds resting on the same tree, the bird free from all sorrows represents Brahman staying in brahmarandhra or sahasrara, and the bird subjected to sorrows stands for the liva lying at the base of the spinal cord.16 The tree described as 'urdhva-mulovak-sakha' (Katha,2.3,1) i.e. as having its roots above and the branches below, refers to the nerve susumna; for at the tope of the nerve exists Brahman and in its lower parts lie the principles of life. Further, the series of creation found in the Samkhya-Yoga system corresponds to the different cakras. The space between sahasrára and the ájňá cakra lying parallel to the brow accomodates the categories from prakrti to ahamkara, while the cakras of Visuddha, anahata, manipura, svadhisthana and muladhara lying at the throat, the heart, the navel, the generative organ and the evacuative organ, respectively, correspond to the categories of ether, air, fire, water and earth, respectively. The Chandogya Up. (5.16) describes the generative organ as a place of water. 17 The Yoga-sútra of Patañjali refers to the nabhi-cakra or navel centre, hrdaya or heart, kanthakupa or throat and murdha-ivotis or brahma-randhra.18 The Yoga-sastra of Dattatreya discusses in clear terms the position of the nerve susumná and the cakras lying within it. 19 The later Upanisads like the Kaivalya, the Yoga-sìkha, the Yoga-cūdāmani etc. deal in detail with the nerve susumnā and the cakras. From all these, we can conclude with certainty that the idea of the nerve susumnā and the cakras was there in the Vedic tradition.

2. Of the secret and dreadful practices of Tantra, the most common and remarkable practices are those performed with the five ma-karas. Of them, mudrá or the practice of offering cooked rice and vegetable etc. to the Mother and taking the same after wards is not at all an element of secrecy or censure. This practice of mudrá may be traced to the Vedic practice of offering purodasa, a kind of cake, to the gods and eating the remains of it.

In the Vedic soma-sacrifices, the sacrifices used to offer the juice of soma-creeper to the gods and take the same after the offering. This soma-juice was a kind of liquor, as it is clearly understood from the behaviours of the gods and the scarifiers after drinking it (RV 2.19.1) Soma was very much favourite to Indra who become intoxicated by drinking it, and, accordingly, he was very often called somapa or soma-drinker, The Satapatha Bráhmana (5.4.5.19) says that spirituous liquor was offered to Indra, Asvina and Sarasvati in the Sautramani sacrifice. Soma sacrifice, soma-juice was extricated three times a day-in the morning, in the noon and in the evening and was offered to gods. Particularly, in the aţirátra type of soma-sacrifice, Soma was used in large quantity at night. Thus, the Tántric practice with wine was a very common element of the Vedic rites.

Animal-sacrifice or pasu-yága was also a very common performance of the Vedic people. In the Bráhmanic literature, there are detailed descriptions of the killing of animals in the animal-sacrifice. In this sacrifice, a spot was demarcated for killing animals, where a yúpa or wooden-frame for binding the animals was kept fixed. After chopping off the head of an animal there, the vapá or fat of the animal was taken out of its abdomen. It was then cleansed, cooked in an earthen jar and offered to the gods, after which it was taken by the scarifiers. Animals commonly killed in animal-sacrifices were rams and goats. In horse-sacrifices, horses along with a number of wild and domestic animals were killed. Vrsabhas or bulls also were probably killed in some sacrifices. According to some, human beings were also killed in the sacrifices of purusamedha and sarva-medha, while according to others, human beings were simply offered alive and not killed.²⁰ In any case, there should be no doubt that the Tántric practice of human sacrifice or nara-vali has its root in the Vedic sacrifices of of purusa-medha and sarva-medha.

The role of sex-elements in connection with religious rites is also found in the Vedic literature. In the description of goddess Usas, there are elements which are prone to arouse sex-feelings. In the Vájasaneyi-Samhitá of the Yajur-Veda, there occurs a hymn (23.22-31) which seems to indicate that sexual union was employed for the promotion of agricultural products. The description of the horse-sacrifice occurring in the Satapatha Bráhmana (1.1,18,20,21) bears some sex elements. The description goes thus: The horse to be sacrificed is covered with a garment and slain. The queens go round it thrice from left to right and thrice from right to left. The chief queen goes near the horse. The queen and the horse are then covered with a garment and are given to lie together. In the meantime, the priest, the maidens and other queens indulge in vulgar and sexual talks. This part of the horsesacrifice has thus a clear reference to sex and hence may be interpreted as having something to do with the fertility-cult.21 Further, in the Satapatha Brahmana we come across numerous passage in which sexual union is identified with sacrifice (2,4.421; 2.51.11,5.13.19; 5.2.5.8;6.3.30;6.3.3.38;7.5.1.6). The Altareya-Aranyaka (2.1.1; 2.3.7) also refers to sex-element when it describes seed and woman-blood as Aditya and Agni. respectively.22

In a number of Upanisadic passages, woman is conceived as the sacrificial fire, her lower private portion as the sacrificial wood, the generative organ as the flame, and so on (Ch.Up.5.18.1-22,Br.Up.6.2.13). The Brhadáranyaka Up.(6.4.3) describes the lower private part of woman as the sacrificial altar and the smaller parts of the same as representing different parts or materials of sacrifice. It is added that one who remembers this during copulation gets the result of the vajapeya-sacrifice. This means that sex-enjoyment should be regarded as a sacrifice and that it should be done without any attachment. In the "Vámadeva-upásaná" of the Chandogya Up.(2.13.1-2), it is said that the sign made by a man to a woman is himkara (the sound 'him'), his lying with her is udgitha (the sound 'aum') his facing towards her is pratihara (inspiration) and so on.²³ The Taittiriya Up. and the Taittiriya Àranyaka say that Prajapati in the form of immortal bliss exists in the generative organ.²⁴ The Brhadáranyaka Up. also says that all the elements of bliss culminate in the bliss of the generative organ.²⁵

Thus, all the elements of the Tántric practices with the five ma-káras can be traced to the sacrificial rites of the Vedas and the philosophical discourses of the Upanisads.

The Tántric practice of the offering of blood and flesh by the sádhaka out of his own body might have developed from the idea of self-immolation found in sarva-yajña or from the Vedic idea that the yajamána or sacrificer is to be looked upon as the pasu or animal to be sacrificed. Though the Tántric practices of citá-sádhaná, sava-sádhaná and munda-sádhaná cannot be directly traced to the Vedic tradition, they seem to be later developments of some or the other Vedic rites.

The Tantric practices of sat-karma or six kinds of abhicaras or magical rites are explicitly dealt with in the Vedic literature as follows:

Sánti: the RV deals with spells for curing diseases (10.162) and prescribes antidotes for poison (1.191;7.50. In the AV, we find numerous spells for curing diseases imagined as demons (5.2.2). Further, in this Veda we find a number of hymns called paustikani by which one could gain happiness and avoid danger. There are also hymns called sammanasya by which peace and harmony of a family could be brought and unity between husband and wife could be restored. The use of protective amulets is seen to be very popular at the time of the AV.

Vasikarana: The Taittirliya-Samithirá (2.3.1) prescribes sámgrahani mantras by which a person could be won over and prominent or powerful persons and unruly wives could be tamed. The Taittiriya-Bráhmana (2.3..10) says that Sita tried to win soma through sorcery. In the AV, there are numerous spells by which a husband or lover could attract his wife or beloved towards him (3.25.1-2). In the same way, spells are found which could be used by a lady to win over the heart of some man. We come across some across some formulas also by which one could appease the wrath of a great master or gain prominence in an assembly.

Stambhana: In the AV, we meet with wild charms by which a woman could be made barren or a man could be robbed of his generative power. In the ábhicárika hymns of the AV, there are also magic formulas to foil the magical acts of some enemy.

Vidvesana: In the RV, we find spells or practices for removing co-wives (10,145,159), as is clarified in the Apastamba-Grhyasútra (10.5-8.9. In the AV also, there are spells which could be applied by a woman to oust her rivals.

Ucátana: In the AV we see spells coming under the class called stri-karmáni by which one could create love intrigues and disturbances in a married life, There also spells which are said to be capable of making some person insane. Again, we come across spells for inflaming the love of some woman (Kausikasukta, 35-28).

Márana: In the Vájasaneyi-Samhita (7.3), the Kátyáyana Srayta-sútra (9.4, 39) and the Taittiriya-Àranyajka (4.27), there are charms against demons. In the ábhicarika-hymns of the AV, we find charms by which enemies could by destroyed.

From the above, it is seen that almost all the elements of the Tántric practices can be traced to the Vedic literature, and, hence, they must be regarded as originating from the Vedas. According to the traditional view also, the Tantras developed from the "Saubhágya-kánda" of the AV. The kálikulárnava-Tantra clearly focuses this tradition when it starts the discourse as; "Now Devi says in the Àtharvana Samhita". The Rudra-Yámala (Ch.17) also refers to Mahádevi as Atharava-Vedasakhini. The Yántra-cintamani, a Tantra-work by Dámodara, is eulogised as containing the essence of the AV. Further, the Kulárnava-Tantra describes the path of Tantra called Kulamárga as the essence of Vedas. In the view of Bháskaráya, the Tántras marks a continuation of the Upanisadic section of the Vedas. Accordingly, the Tántric Upanisads are supposed to maintain a direct relation between the Vedas and the Tantras. All these views go in favour of the result of our foregoing study that the Tantric practices have got their origin in the Vedas.

REFERENCES

- vide U. K. Das's "Upakramaniká" to the Kulárnava Tantra, p. 4
- mathitvá jnána-manthena vedagama-mahárnavam. Sáradharmo mayá devi kula-dharmah samuddhrtah — Kulárnava-Tantra, 2.10; tasmád vedátmakam sastram viddhi kaulátmakam priyc — ibid, 2.86.
- vide Yoni-Tantra, Chs. 5 and 7; Nila-Tantra, Ch. 11; Kurnári-Tantra, Ch. 6 and Gupta-sádhana-Tantra Ch. 4.
- yoga-bhogátmakam kaulam Kularnava-Tantra, 2.24;
 yogo bhogáyate ibid, 2.25.
- ácáryaván puruso veda Chándogya Up., 6.14.2.
- sukhásanasthah sucih sama-grívá-sírah-sarirah Kaivalya Up, 1.5: trir-unnatam sthápya samam sariram hrdindríyani manasa sanni-vesya — Svetásvatara Up, 2.8.
- payúpsthe' panam Prasna Up, 3.5; athaikayordhva udánam — ibid, 3.7; úrdhvam pránam unnayaty-apánam pratyagasyati — Katha Up, 2.23; pránán prapidyeha samyukta-cestah — Svetasvatara Up, 2.9.
- phat pránáva tva vyánaya tvá Vajasaneyi-Samhitá, 7.3.
- 9. khat-phad-jahi, chindhi bhindhi handhi kat Taittiriya

- Aranyaka, 7.27.
- aum-ity-etad-aksaram-udgitham upásita Chándogya Up,
 1.1,1; see ibid, 1.12-13.
- puram hantri-mukham visva-måtr-rave rekha svara-madhyam tadesa, brhat-tithir disa pañca ca nityå sasodasikam puramadhyam vibharti — quoted by Svami Visnutirtha in Saundarya-lahari, p. 334.
- angustha-mātrah pujruso madhya átmani tisthati Katha Up, 2.1.12; angustha-matrah puruso ntaratmá sada janánám hrdaye sannivistah Svetasvatara Up, 3.13; brahmapure daharam pundarikam Chandogya Up, 8, 1,1; hrt-pundrikam virajam visuddham Kaivalya Up, 1.6.
- salam caiká ca hrdayasya nádyas tásám múrdhánam abhinihirtaká — Katha Up, 2.3.16; puram ekádasa dvaram — ibid, 2.2.1.
- 14. asta-cakrá nava-dvára Atharva-Veda, 10.2.
- 15. brhatih kikasáh ibid, 9, 12.
- dva suparná sayujá sakháyá samánam vrksam parisasvajate.
 tayor anyah pippalam svadv-atty-anasnann-anyo abhicakasiti
 Mundaka Up, 3. 1.1.
- 17. vide Chandogya Up, 5.16 and Sañkara's comt. on it.
- nabhi-cakre kaya-vyuha-sthanam Yoga-sutram 3.29; hrdaye citta-samvit — ibid, 3.34; kantha-kupe ksutpipasanivrttih — ibid, 3.30; murdha-jyotisi siddha-darsanam — ibid, 3.32.
- vide Dattàtreya Yoga-sástra verses 107-118.
- vide Cinva-Svami, Yajña-tattva-prakása, pp. 38-39, 108-122.
- puruse he vá ayam adityo garbho bhavati yad-etad rajah
 Aitareya Aranyaka, 2. 1. 1.
- A. B. Keith, Religion and Philosophy of the Vedas and the Upanisads, p. 345.
- 23. upamantrayate sa hinkaro, jnapayate sa prastavah, striyásaha sete sa udgithah, prati strim saha sete sa pratiharah Chándogya Up, 2. 13.1.

- prajápatír amrtánanda ity-upasthe Taittiriya Up. 3. 11.
 3.
- 25. sarvesam anandanam upastha ekayanam Brhadaranyaka Up, 2.4.11; ekaki na ramate sa dvitiyam aicchar ibid, 1.4.3; see ibid, 6.4.3-4.
- sarvabhyo va esa devatabhya atmanam alabhate....taddevatabhyo yajamana atmanam niskrinite — Aitareya Brahmana, 6.3; avadhnan purusam pasum — Atharva-Veda, 19, 1.7, 10 and Taittiriya Aranyaka, 3, 12, 35.
- tantránam upanisac-chesatvat Bháskararáya's comt. on Nitya-sodasikarnava, 1.22.

THE RESERVE THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF THE

TO THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF

Chapter-4
What is Siva Liñga ?

Chapter-4

The worship of Siva-linga placed on a round plate called arghya or yonipata is a common practice prevalent in the cult of Saivism. Practically, in this cult the worship of Siva-linga is much more popular than the worship of the image of Siva. It is said by the Saivites that the worship of Siva can not be complete without the worship of Siva-linga. The Siva-purána declares that the worship of linga is higher than the worship of Siva's image.

As to the existence of the practice of Siva-linga worship in ancient India, there is no definite proof at our hand. Some faint marks of the worship of Siva's image are, of course, found in the Vedic literature. For example, the Rg-Veda refers to some cáru citra or beautiful image or art of Siva.² The Yajur-veda also seems to hint to the existence of the practice of the worship of Siva's image, when it speaks of the worship of Tryambaka marked with sweet scent.³ But no significant hint to the existence of the worship of Siva-linga is to be found in the Vedic Leterature.

Those who look upon linga-worship as a form of phallism as discussed below, hold that the term 'sisnadeva' occurring in the Rg-Veda' means some barbarians following the practice of phallic worship. But this view can not be accepted on the ground that no reference to such a tradition is found in the Vedic interpretations of ancient India. Yáska in his Nirukta says that 'sisnadeva' means one who is devoid of brahmacarya or sex-control. Durgácárya also explains the term in the same way. Sayana explains the term to mean people addicted to sensual pleasure. Accordingly, the word 'sisnadeva' cannot be said to having relation with phallic worship.

In the remains of Mohenjodaro, some times of short shaped stone or burnt clay have been found. A few round-shaped flat and plain things also have been discovered from these remains. According to some thinkers, the former class of items are probably those of Siva-lingaand the latter class of items, those of yonipatas or arghyas. George Marshal, in particular, is keen to identify some objects made of steatire and terra cotta as phallic symbols. But this is a mere conjecture having no definite proof whatsoever. This view can be refuted by the fact that even within a period of about two thousand years after the Mohenjodaro civilisation, no such a tradition of Siva-linga-worship could be found in India.

In the Mahabhárata, there are clear marks of the practice of Siva-linga-worship. In the 'Anusásana-parvan of the same, there is clear reference to Siva-linga. In the 'Sauptika-parvan' (Ch.17.21-3) also a reference to the Siva-linga is found.' In the 'Vana-parvan', Arjuna is seen to be worshipping Siva in the form of an alter which certainly stands for Siva-linga.⁸ The worship of Siva0linga was however not popular in ancient India. Patanjali refers to Sivam, but not to Siva-linga. In the coins of the Kushana dynasty, images of Siva and Uma are found, but there is no evidence of Siva-linga. It seems that Siva-linga became popular during the Gupta age i.e. around the 4th century A.D. The connection of Siva-linga with yonipata seems to be still later.

Now, the problem before us is; What is this Siva-linga? The popular idea about the nature of Siva-linga is that it is a symbol of the generative organ of Siva, the plate below, known as arghya or yonipata, representing the female organ of Gauri, the Mother-Goddess. This idea is coupled with the general belief that Siva is a god fulfilling the desires of men in their marital life. A great majority of scholars also opine, in conformity with the popular belief that Siva-linga is a symbol of Siva's generative organ. In support of this view, some scholars hold that different forms of phallic worship were prevalent among the primitive societies of countries like Egypt, Greek, Roman etc., and the worship of Siva-linga is simply a variety of that primitive tradition of phallism. Some scholars, on the other hand, contradict this view, saying that Sivalinga is the symbol of Siva himself, and not of his generative organ. We are here making an endeavour to solve this problem and find out the real nature of Sivalinga.

Before making an observation on the controversy, it is to be noted that in the Puránas, there is a number of episodes about Siva-linga, some of which describe Siva-linga as the manifestation of the generative organ of Siva, while some others describe it as a revelation of Siva himself in the form of jyotrlinga or brilliant form. Episodes describing Siva-linga as the generative organ of Siva are the following:

- 1. The Siva-Purána says that once Siva, desiring to test the power of penance of the sages, assumed a beautiful form and, in a naked position, tried to allture the wives of the sages, and the wives of the sages also became allured towards him. At that time, the sages saw him and cursed that his linga should fall down there at once. Io Siva-linga* fell to the ground at once, but it took the form of fire, began to move hither and thither and burn all things that came to its front. The linga gradually expanded and pervaded the whole world. All the gods, demons and men became afraid to see the linga and went to Brahmá for rescue. Brahmá advised them to meditate upon Uma, so that she takes the form of yoni and pacifies the linga. Io gods and the sages did accordingly, and the linga became stable resting on the yoni of Umá.
- 2. (a) The Skanda-Purána says that once Siva assumed a beautiful form and, in a naked position, went to the Dáruka forest sportingly to collect alms from the hermitages of the sages, and tried to arouse the feeling of lust in the minds of the wives of the sages. At this, the sages became angry and cursed that his/linga should fall to the ground at once. Siva's linga at once fell to the ground.¹²
- (b) In the same Purána the episode is described in a somewhat different way. It is said that after the death of Sati, Siva's consort, in the sacrifice of Daksa, Siva became mad with the feeling of lust and began to move hither and thither. He, thus, reached the hermitage of the Bálakhilyas and disturbed the wives of the sages with the feeling of lust. At this, he sages became angry and cursed that his linga should at once fall to the ground. Siva's linga at once fell to the ground, ¹³ but it began to frighten the whole world. In fear, the gods began to sing in praise of Siva. At this, Siva became pleased and told that if Brahma, the gods and the Brahmins worshipped the linga, the world would be saved Accordingly, Brahmá, the gods and the Brahmins worshipped the Siva-linga and the world was saved.

- 3. The Vámana-Purána says that after the death of Sati, Siva became mad with lust, travelled hither and thither and then entered the forest called Dáruvana where he disturbed the wives of the sages. At this, the sages cursed him as a result of which the linga of Siva fell to the ground. Immediately after this, Siva vanished and his linga expanded to such an extent that it touched both the lower region and the upper region. At this, the world became afraid. Visnu and Brahma then approached the linga and, with a view to finding out its end, went to its lower and upper regions, respectively. But they returned in vain and began to sing in praise of Siva. Siva then appeared and Visnu and Brahmá requested him to take back his linga. Siva agreed to take back his linga provided the gods worshipped Siva-linga. Visnu agreed and Brahmá worshipped golden Siva-linga.
- 4. In an episode of the Siva-Purána, it is said that once Kali, the black-complexioned consort of Siva, was engaged in deep meditation with a view to becoming gauri or white-complexioned. At that time Siva became mad with the pangs of separation from Káli and, being beautifully dressed, entered a forest of the hermits in a naked position with his companions. Except Arundhati, all the wives of the hermits became disturbed with the feeling of lust to see him. Seeing the conditions of their wives, the hermits became angry and gave Siva a good beating. In a blood-stained condition, Siva reached the hermitage of Vasistha. Arundhati served him with great care. Siva blessed her and went out of the hermitage. The wives of the hermits followed Siva again, and the sages also went on beating him. Thus passed off twelve years. After that Bhrgu and other sages cursed Siva that his linga should fall to the ground. Siva's linga fell to the ground but, in a beautiful and brilliant form, it expanded all around and then entered deep into the earth. At this, the whole world became dark and the hearts of the sages also was enveloped with darkness, Arundhati then came to know—the identity of Siva and cured his wounds by her power of merits. The sages also recognised Siva and started singing—in his praise. Then a voice was heard from above which advised the sages to worship—the Siva-linga, saying that the worship of the Siva-linga is greater than the worship—of the image—of Siva.¹⁵

- 5. The Padma-Purana says that once Sváyambhuva Manu performed a great sacrifice in the mountain of Mandara. The sages who attended the sacrifice asked the Vada-knowing Brahmins, 'Who is the greatest among the gods?' The question was put to the great sage. Bhrgu who advised the sages to examine the characters of Brahma, Visnu and Siva for having the answer to the question. Bhrgu said that, of these three, the one who would be found to have a pure character of the quality of sattva would be regarded as the greatest. Then, the sages alongwith Bhrgu went to Kailasa to examine the character of Siva. They met Nandin at the gate and requested him to inform Siva of their presence. Nandin told them that, as Siva was then engaged in enjoyment with Umá, it was not possible for them to approach him at that time. The sages waited at the gate for a long time, but yet they did not get permission from Siva to meet him. At this, Bhrgu became very angry and cursed Siva, saying that as he disregarded the sages in his mood of lustive enjoyment, with his consort, he should take the form of yoni-linga or the female and male organs combined,16
- 6. In the "Sauptika-parvan" of the Mahábhárata, it is said that at the time of the cosmic creation, when Mahádeva was engaged in penance within water, Brahmá created another Prajápati and directed him to create all the beings. Accordingly, Prajápati created innumerable beings. After that Mahádeva came out of water and found that the act of creation was already complete. At this, he considered his linga unuseful and, having torn it off, he went to the mountain of Mújavat. The linga of Siva was stuck to the earth.

Episodes describing. Siva-linga as the symbol of the divine and brilliant form of Siva are the following:

 The Skanda-Purana says that once there arose a quarrel between Brahma and Siva on the question of their superiority.

The quarrel ultimately resulted into a fight between the two, which continued for one thousand years. After that a jyotir-linga or brilliant linga appeared in between the two, ¹⁸ and a voice from the sky advised them to refrain from fighting. It was said that the jyotir-linga was the Siva -linga, and he who could reach the end of the linga would be treated as the greater between the two. Brahmá went upwards and Visnu downwards to see the end of the linga, but neither could succeed in his venture.

- 2. This story of the revelation of the jyotirmaya or brilliant linga is found in the Brahmánda-Purána also. ¹⁹ It is said that when Brahmá and Visnu were engaged in quarrel on the question of superiority, a fire appeared in the northern direction. The brilliance of the fire made all other lights insignificant. Seeing that surprising fire, Brahmá and Visnu ran towards it to know what it was. The fire gradually pervaded the sky and the earth, and Visnu found an indescribable linga within the fire. Brahmá and Visnu went upwards and down-wards, respectively, and tried for one hundred years to reach the end of the linga, but failed. After that Siva appeared before them.
- 3. The Siva-Purána also describes the revelation of the jyotir-linga at the time of the quarrel between Brahmá and Visnu. Here the jyotir-linga is described to be a fearful pillar of fire within which Mahádeva, the formless, remained.²⁰
- 4. In another episode of the Siva-Purána, it is said that after his birth from the navel-lotus of Visnu lying in yoganidrá a state between sleep and wakefulness Brahmá, desiring to know the secret of his birth, travelled through the stalk of the navel-lotus of Visnu for one hundred years, and again travelled through the lower region of the stalk for another one hundred years, but he did not find the end of the stalk. After that, by the direction of a voice from the sky, Brahma practised penance for twelve years. After that Visnu appeared and identified himself as the creator of Brahma. At this, Brahma became angry, abused Visnu and started fighting with him. During their fight, a jyotir-linga appeared in their midst, which was extremely brilliant and indescribable, having neither beginning nor end and neither increase nor decrease. It was formless and was known to be the cause of the universe.21 Then, by the proposal of Visnu, both Brahmá and Visnu tried to find out the source of the fiery substance. Brahmá went upwards and Visnu downwards, but finding no end to the jyotir-linga, they began to meditate upon it for one hundred years. Then ten handed and five-headed Mahadeva appeared before them. Brahmá and Visnu sang hymns in praise of Siva and Siva pleased by the songs advised them to make Siva-linga with clay and to worship and mediate upon it. The same episode is found in the same language in the linga-Purána also.

- 5. According to another episode found in the Siva-purána, 22 Brahmá and Visnu were once engaged in fighting to test who was superior between them. In this fight, Visnu applied the Mähesvara-weapon and Brahmá let loose the Pásupata-weapon, as a result of which the world was on the brink of destruction. Seeing this, Mahadeva appeared in between the two in the form of a pillar of fire, and the weapons of Visnu and Brahmá dissolved into that pillar of fire.
- 6. The Kurma-Purana describes linga as inexpressible, brilliant, indestructible and as of the nature of bliss, it is said that when Brahma and Visnu were engaged in fighting to test their superiority upon each other, a jyotir-linga or pillar of fire appeared in between them. The jyotir-linga was without any beginning or end, without any increase of decrease, and was extremely brilliant.²³ This jyotir-linga pervaded the whole universe. Brahma and Visnu went upwards and down-wards, respectively, to find out the end of the linga, but failed. Then, they started praying to Siva, and Siva appeared before them.

7. The Káliká Purána says that after destroying the Daksayajna or sacrifice performed by Daksa, Siva took the dead body of Sati, his consort, on his shoulder and wandered all around in extreme anguish. Finding this act of Siva to be dangerous to the world, Brahmá, Visnu and Sani entered the body of Sati, cut it into pieces and dropped them on the earth. And Siva remained in the form of linga in those place where the head of Sati fell, and took the form of lauha-maya Sivalinga or Siva-linga having iron as its material.²⁴

From the above study, it is clear that both the said views about Sivalinga have their roots in the Puranic tradition. Now, the problem before us is: which of these two views can be regarded as genuine. On this problem, the following points may be considered for coming to a conclusion.

- 1. The term 'linga' did not originally mean the generative organ. It meant the fine state of something. Vacaspati in his Samkhya tattva-kaumudi says that 'linga' means that fine state of something into which the gross form of that thing is desolved. The Skanda-Purana also explains the term in the same way. In the general usage of the term, 'linga' means some special mark which points to the existence of something else. It is used to denote the generative organ only in a secondary sense, and this sense developed only at a later time Hence, the term 'linga' can not be taken to mean the generative organ, if the context does not require it.
- 2. In Vira-Saivism, the term 'linga' is used to denote any divine form. According to this school, there are six linga-sthalas or forms of Siva, namely, maháling a (the great), prasada-linga (the gracious), cara-linga (the dynamic) siva-linga (the auspicious), guru-linga (the preceptive) and acara-linga (the practical).²⁵ These linga-sthalas have not even the slightest relation with the generative organ. It is notable that the Saivites of this school are the most devoted followers of Siva-linga. They are called Lingayets also, as they follow the practice of hanging a Siva-linga on the neck.²⁷ Even in such a system, Siva-linga does not mean the generative organ.

- 3. The practice of attaching yonipata below the Sivalinga is not universal. There are numerous Siva-lingas which are not attached to yonipata.
- 4. Though the linga-worship is specially related to the Siva-cult, it is not monopolised by this cult. For there are references to the linga-worship of other gods like Visnu and Brahma. For example, the Kálika-Purána speaks of the lingas of Brahma and Visnu.²⁸
- 5. There are numerous Siva-lingas with eyes, mouth, nose etc. and also some with four mouths.

On the strength of the above facts, some think that it is reasonable to look upon Siva-linga as a symbol or representation of Siva himself and not of his generative organ. In the view of Mahesvar Das and Haridas Bhattacharya, Siva-linga was never connected with the phallic worship; it simply stood for the indescribable Absolute. Haridas Bhattacharya and Ramesh Chandra Majumdar hold that Siva-linga is a substitute of Siva, just as the salagrama stone is a substitute of Naráyana, tis assumed by some thinkers that the idea of representing Siva by Siva-linga might have originated from the Upanisadic statements like 'Brahman is stable like a tree', Though without any foot or hand, it moves and receives: though without any eye, it sees; and though without any ear, it hears etc... 'which speak of the unchangeable nature of Brahman.

It is, however, an extreme view to hold that the worship of Siva-linga was not at all connected with phallism. The idea of phallism was there, but it was blended with the idea of Siva as the absolute cause. The point is that, Siva conjoined with Sakti, the Mother-Goddess, is regarded by the Saivites as the ultimate cause of the world. This idea compared with the worldly fact of procreation from the organic contact between male and female, lead to the idea of organic contact between Siva and the Mother-Goddess, for the explanation of the creation of the world. In reality, view, from the transcondental point of view, Siva and Sakti are formless; they assume divine forms only for the satisfaction of the devotional sentiments of the spiritual aspirants. Hence, the idea of the generative organ of Siva and the Mother-Goddess does not suit to the transcendental nature of Siva and the Mother. Even in the state of divine froms. Siva and Sakti are not to be taken on a part with other beings enjoying organic pleasure. The forms of Siva and Sakti are divine and are completely free from sensual pleasure. This divine existence or sport of siva and Sakti or Gauri has its parallel only in the sport between Srikrishna and Radha or the gopis. In this divine existence, there is no difference between the body and its parts or organs for every part of the body is cinmaya or divine. Accordingly, it is foolishness to distinguish between the body of Siva and his organ. The so called difference between the whole and the part is made only for the satisfaction of the sentiment of divine love of the devotees. Again, it is not the organic relation between Siva and Sakti, but the total relation between them that is the cause of the universe. Hence, it is Siva in his totality that may be compared to the male generative organ and Sakti in her totality, to the female generative organ. It this kind his idea that degenerated into the naked sex-beheaviours of Siva depicted in the above mentioned Puranic episodes. This shameful and pitiable delineation of Siva, otherwise known as Yogirája or the king of the self-controlled vogins, most be attributed to the credit of some authors of low grade. And it is the myths fashioned by such authors of low grade that have influenced a class of thinkers or devotees to take the Sivalinga as the generative organ of Siva. What we men to say is this that. Siva-linga primarily denotes the brilliant divine form of Siva, it is the pratika or symbol of the totality of Siva, may be is gained as the male generative organ, in view of the fact that the creation of the world proceeds from the contact between Siva, the Absolute, and Sakti, the conscious power of Siva. This very idea is found in the Kálika-Purána and the Brahma-Samhita which declare that Sambhu, Sankara or Mahesvara is of the form of linga.32 To be more explicit, even when the conception of generative organ is applied, Sivalinga is to be taken to represent the totality of Siva, and not the generative Organ of Siva. It may be added that, it is this idea of Siva-linga as the symbol of the totality of Siva that has relevance to religious practices or spiritual progress of the devotees. The concept of Siva-linga as a symbol of the generative organ of Siva has nothing to do with the religious practices or spiritual progress of the devotees. The concept of Siva-linga as a symbol of the generative organ of Siva has nothing to do with the religious practices nor with the spiritual progress of a devotee.

REFERENCES

- sankara-pratimávás tu linga-puja gariyasi Siva-Purána Dharma-Samhita, 10, 205.
- tava sriye marutá marjayanta rudra yat te janima cárucitram — RV. 3. 8. 16.3.
- tryambakam yajámahe sugandhim pusti-vardhanam YV. quoted by M. Das, "siv ki anarya devata" Bángla Sáhitya Patriká, p. 55 Calcutta University, 1967-8.
- Má sisna-devá api gur rtham nah RV, 7, 21, 5.
- sisna-devá abrahmacaryah Nirukta, 4. 19; sisnadevah sisnena nityam eva prakirnabhih sthbhih sákam kridanta ásate srautrani karmani utsrtya — Durgacarya on ibid; sisnena divyanti kridanta iti sisnadevah abrahmacarya ityarthah — Sayana on RV, 7, 21, 5.
- See supra "Siva as a Vedic God".
- See Mahábharata, "Sauptika-parvan", 17, 21-3.
- mrn-mayam sthandilam krtva mályenápújayad bhavam Mahábhárata, "Vana-parvan", 39. 65.
- See H. N. Bhattacharya, Hinduder Devadevi Vol. II, pp. 118-9 and A. C. Das, Rg-Vedic Culture, p. 164.
- tvadíyam caica lingam ca patatám prthíví-tale Siva-Purána, Jñána-samhitá, 42. 15.
- yoni-rupa bhavec ced vai tada tal sthiratam bhajet ibid,
 27.
- 12. tatas tat patiam lingam tat ksanac-chankarasya ca —

- Skanda-Purana, "Prabhisa-khanda", 187.22.
- tatas caivapatal lingam tat ksanat tat pura-dvisah ibid, 39, 15.
- tatah papata devasya lingam prthvim vyadarayat....rasatalam vivesatha brahmande cordhvato' bhinat Vamana-Purana.
 66-7.
- 15. See I above.
- yoni-linga-svarupam vai tasmad bhavisyati Padma-Purana, "Uttara-khanda", Ch. 78.
- 17. Mahabharat, "Sauptika-parvan", Ch. 7.
- avirbhutam maha-lingam divyam tejo-mayam subham Skanda-Purana, 34, 13,
- 19. See Brahmanda-Purana, Ch. 60.
- mahanala-stambha-vibhisanakrtir vabhuva tan-madhyatale as niskalah — Siva-Purana, Vidyesvara-samhita, 4, 11.
- jyotir-lingam todotpannam avayor madhye' dbhutam anaupamya-nirdislam-avyaktam visva-sambhavam — Siva-Purana, Jnana-samhita, 2, 62-4.
- See Siva-Purana, Vidyesvara-samhita, Ch. 4.
- prabodhartham param lingam pradurbhutam sivatmakam ksaya-vrddhi-vinirmuktam adi-madhyanta-varjitam — Kurma-Purana, 'Purva-bhaga', 26, 75.
- tatra tatra mahadevah svayam linga-svarupa-dhrk.....Kalika-Purana, 18. 47; gatva silatvam tatraiva lingatvam gatavan harah.....ibid, 18. 54.
- liyate asmin iti lingam Samkhya-taitva-kaumudi on Samkhya-karika, 5; alayah sarva-devanam layanal lingam ucyate — Skanda-Purana, quoted by M. Das op cit., p. 56.
- 26. See Srikara-bhasya on Brahma-sutra, 1, 1, 4, 11, 21-29.
- 27. See J. N. Sinha, Schools of Saivism, p. 152.
- svayam visnur linga-rupi tatraste bhagavan harih Kalika-Purana. 79. 184; visnuh sila-svarupena brahma-lingasvarupa-dhrk — ibid, 80.36.
- See M. Das op cit pp. 55-6 and H. Bhattacharya, The - Foundations of Living Faiths, pp. 228-9.

- 30. See Bhattacharya, loc cit and K. A. Nilakantha Sastri, "An Historical Sketch of Saivism," Cultural Heritage of India, Vol. IV, p. 67.
- 31. vrksa iva stabdho divi tisthaty-ckah Svetasvatara Up., 3.9; apani-pado javano grahita pasyaty-acaksuh sa srnoty-akarnah ibid, 3.19.
- saktiman purusah so'yam linga-rupi mahesvarah Brahma-Samhita, 5. 14; pujayel linga-sankaram Kalika-Purana.
 6. Iniga-svarupi bhagavan-chambhua tatra svayam sthitah ibid, 80.36.

Chapter-5
Tantric Practice with Makáras

Chapter-5

To the general people, Tantra and the Tantrikas or the followers of Tantra are objects of both dislike and fear. Some occult practices called abhicaras, which have little relations with religion, and also some religious pursued by the Tantrikas are responsible for this. Of the religious practices of Tantra, the ma-kara-sadhanas or practices with the ma-karas, in particular, have been subjected to serious criticisms.

These makaras are five in number, namely, madya or wine, mansa or meat, matsya or fish, mudrá or crooked rice and vegetable and maithuna or sex-relation.¹ These are called makaras, because all the words denoting these objects have makara or the sound 'm' in the beginning. And makara-sádhanás are those religious practices that are pursued by the Tantrikas with the help of these makaras. Of the five makaras, mudrá is described by none as an object coming under mudrá are not at all harmful to our moral life and are used by all of us in our day-to-day life. But the other four makaras are seriously criticised by all the scriptures of Hinduism including Buddhism, Jainism and Sikhism, and also by the people in general as directly opposed to religion and ethics.

Of course, scriptures like the Manu-smrti and the like have prescribed fish and meat as food, but these prescriptions are meant for the people of low grade who have no idea about the higher and purer plane of spiritual life. This is clear from the fact that, while giving his final assessment, Manu has declared non-eating of fish and meat as the uttama or the highest form of practice, and has advised the spiritual aspirants to abandon the practice of eating fish and meat.² Likewise, drinking of wine has also been allowed to the people of lower rank, and sexrelation has been prescribed for the house-holders, though at the end, the abandonment of these habits has been eulogised as giving great fruits.³ This means that these four ma-karas are treated as opposed to religious or spiritual life. Under these circumstances, a question saturally arises in our mind as to why these things have been declared in Tantra as means for spiritual uplift.

In some authoritative scriptures, it is held that the terms 'madya', 'mánsa' etc. found in the Tántric prescriptions do not, in reality, mean wine, fish etc. with which we are acquainted. These terms are here said to be used in technical senses to denote different steps or stages in the path of spiritual progress and realisation. Thus, in the Tántric scriptures, we find the explanations of the ma-káras in different ways as follows: (1) The practice of drinking madya or wine means the practice of tasting the flow of nectar oozing from the talu or Brahmarandhra situated at the top of the spinal cord. 'Mansa' means speech (má = tongue, amsá ≈ speech) and, hence, the practice of eating mánsa means speech-control. 'Matsya' means svása, the outgoing breath, and prasvása, the ignoring breath, or the two forms of air lying in the nerves called Ganga i.e. idá and Yamuna i.e. pingala. Hence, the practice of eating matsya means pránáyama i.e. breath-control or aircontrol. The practice of eating mudrá means digesting the sentiments of desire, fear, hatred, vanity, shame etc., by boiling them by the fire of knowledge, 'Maithuna' means union between Brahman and the individual self.4 (2) 'Madya' means bliss derived from the enjoyment of Brahman through the practice of Yoga, 'Mátsya' means the dedication of all actions to Brahman. 'Matsya' means feeling the joys and sorrows of all beings as one's own joys and sorrows. 'Mudra' mean giving up the company of evil persons, 'Maithauna' means union of the self with Siva, the Highest.⁵ (3) 'Madya' means absorption in the meditation of Brahman and in the bliss arising from such meditation, 'Mansa' means absorption in the meditation of Brahman through the destruction of merits (punya), demerits (pápa), anger etc. 'Matsya' means sense-control and absorption in the meditation of the self. 'Mudra' means 'boiling' or destroying desire, greed, etc. 'Maithuna' means absorption in Brahman.6 (4) Madya giving rise to happiness and misery stands for rakta or blood. Mansa energising the body and the mind represents váyu or air. Matsva increasing the power of fertility signifies water. Mudrá or vegetable forming the foundation of all the living beings symbolises the earth. Maithuna, the root of multiplicity, represents vyoman or space. Hence the practice of the five ma-karas means divinisation of all these elements and dedication of the same of the Lord. (5) 'Madya' means tasting the flow of supreme nectar oozing from bindu (which lies in the lotus of sahasrara at the top of the spinal cord and functions as the root of all manifestations) as a result of the union between the kundalini-power and bindu. 'Mansa' means destroying merits (punya) and demerits (papa) — symbolised by the animal to be sacrificed — and offering the heart — represented by mansa — to the Lord. 'Matsya' means controlling the senses and bringing them to the contact of the self. 'Maithuna' means bringing the individual self in contact with the Supreme Self.

Here the question is: if the said words are really used in their technical senses to symbolise spiritual practices of different grades, as presented above, why have the Tantrikas chosen these words which in their general usage carry the meanings of undesirable things and thereby arouse doubts and disrespect in the minds of people? To this, some say that these words have been used to attract the ordinary people or people of low grade who are addicted to such things. But this interpretation cannot be accepted on the following grounds: (1) First, it is not possible to attract the ordinary people simply by uttering a few words denoting things of allurement. To attract the ordinary people, those things must actually be offered to them for their enjoyment. (2) Secondly, in the Tantric scriptures. detailed descriptions of the makaras are found as follows: Uttama madya or madya of high quality can be produced from molases, sesamum and honey. Mánsa or meat can be acquired from the three types of animals living in water, land and air. Amongst matsyas or fishes, sála, bodála and rohita are the best ones, Sáli-rice — white like the moon-beams — when cooked or baked with ghee becomes suitable to be used as mudra.9 Flowers are also worthy of being used as mudrá. In thecase of the practice of Maithuna Sádhaka's own wife is declared to be the best associate.10 All these descriptions have clear references to the corresponding material things we are acquiainted with. It is neither possible nor, desirable to give acquainted with. It is neither possible nor desirable to give symbolic or spiritual interpretations to all these terms. (3) Thirdly, the five ma-káras in this director popular senses are seen to be used not only by the ordinary sádhakas but also by sádhakas of high rate, in the pursuit of spiritual life. Great sádhakas like Bámaksepa and others used to take wine, meat etc. in their spiritual practices. Sri P. K. Chattopadhayay in his Tantrábhilásir Sadhusanga informs us how great Tantrikas having super-sensuous experiences also used to practice with the five makaras. An event described in this work will suffice the position: In the dark night of a new-moon day, a number of Tantrikas, each having his female associate with him, assembled in a lonely cemetery, sat in a circular way, consumed sufficient meat and wine along with their female associates and practised for the whole night. In this assembly, the cakresvara or the head of the circle and the bhairavi, his female associate, embraced each other in a naked position and attained samadhi, loosing their external senses.11 This description shows that even the sadhakas of high rate practise with the five makáras in their popular senses.

Now, we are confronted with two problems: (1) First, if wine, meat etc. are really meant for spiritual practices, why have the Tántrikas given the aforesaid symbolic or spiritual interpretations of the ma-káras? (2) Secondly, why did the great followers of Tantra like Ramakrishna and others not practice with the ma-karas?

In solving these problems, the Tántrikas say that sádhakas or spiritual aspirants are divided into three types, according to three types of bhávas or mental attitude. The three types of bhávas are: (a) pasubháva or tamasika-bháva — the animalistic attitude or the attitude of the quality of tamas, (b) virabháva or the rajasika-bháva — the heroic attitude or the attitude of the quality of rajas, and (c) divyabháva or sáttvika-bhava — the divine attitude or the attitude of the quality of sattva. 12 Though these three bhávas are sometimes described as three steps in the path of spiritual progress, it is more reasonable to regard them as three different ways of spiritual practice pursued by the sadhakas of three different attitudes. Of these three types of sádhakas, a sádhaka of the pasubhava is not entitled to practise with the ma-káras in their popular sense, since practices with the ma-karas may bring downfall in his spiritual life. Hence, some anukalpas or substitutes for the makáras are prescribed for this class of sadhakas as follows : The substitutes for matsya are cocoanut-water, milk, honey, the juice of ginger mixed with molasses so on. The substitutes for mansa are salt, ginger, sesamum, garlic and so on. The substitutes for matsya are red radish (mulaka), brinjal, salt, ginger, etc. The substitutes for mudra are paddy, rice etc. The substitutes for maithuna is offering of flower.13 For the sadhakas of divyabhava also, the five makaras are not prescribed, since the sadhaka of this class, being always absorbed in divine thoughts, consider it superfluous to practise with these external elements. The sadhakas of this class are advised to; take only the symbolic or spiritual meanings of the ma-karas as mentioned above. The five ma-karas in their populer senses are prescribed - for the sadhakas of virabhava only. According to some, the external ma-karas are prescribed for the sadhakas of divyabhava also.14 But it is more reasonable to attach the practice with the external ma-karas to the sadhakas of virabhava only, as it is the sadhakas of virabhava only that try to attain spiritual enlightenment through confrontation with the natural tendencies of the mind-boby. But for whomsoever the ma-karas might be prescribed, a sadhaka is not allowed to practice with them according to his sweet will. A sadhaka may practise with the makaras only when the preceptor, considering the capability of the sadhaka, allows him to do so.

In some Tantras, the five ma-káras have been described as obligatory for all kinds of sadhakas. The Mahánirvána-Tantra says that without the practice of ma-káras, a sadhaka cannot except to make progress in his spiritual journey, as he is liable to be confronted with obstacles at every step of his journey. The Mátrkábheda-Tantra says that without drinking madya or wine, no person can acquire the highest knowledge and that by drinking madya even the worst sinner can acquire real knowledge and attain liberation. A person, it is said, attains suratva or godliness at the very moment of drinking sura or wine. Likewise, the Kularnava-Tantra and some other Tantras also say that the practice with the ma-karas is essential for spiritual uplift.15 In all these cases, however, the ma-karas are to be accepted in their symbolic or spiritual sense, since the practice with the spiritual ma-karas is obligatory for all. It is in the case of the sadhakas of virabhava only that practice with the ma-karas in their direct or popular sense has been regarded as necessary. In reality in the case of the sadhakas of virabhava also, practice with the external ma-káras is not obligatory. The sadhakas of this class are simply allowed, and not compelled, to practise with the ma-karas. This is known from the fact that there are numerous great sadhakas who did not practise with the external ma-karas, and that a great sadhaka like Ramakrishna described this way of spiritual practice as 'a path full of rubbish." It cannot, however, be denied that practice with the external ma-káras - be it obligatory or optional - has been regarded in Tantra as a means for spiritual uplift.

Now, as said above, the non-Tantric thinkers have always decried the ma-káras as great evils, on the ground that they bring downfall in our ethical and spiritual life. Hence, the Tantric prescription of these ma-káras as means for spiritual uplift naturally evokes these questions: First, why have these antispiritual things been considered in Tantra as means for spiritual uplift? Secondly, is it really possible to make progress in spiritual life with the help of these ma-karas?

In solving the first question, it will have to be noted that Tantra has never described the enjoyment of the ma-karas as such to be the means for spiritual progress. Tantra has described the ma-karas simply as sub-servient to the spiritual progress of a sadhaka who, having his aim fixed on spiritual enlightenment, undertakes the relevant practices with the help of these ma-karas. A person whose purpose is simply to eat fish and meat, to drink wine, and to enjoy sexual pleasure can never be expected to make progress in the spiritual path. If the enjoyment of these ma-karas as such be regarded as means for spiritual progress or for the attainment of liberation, then most of the people would be entitled to liberation without any endeavour. Tantra says that with the exception of a person eating matsya in its symbolic or spiritual sense, all fish-eaters are to be regarded as fishermen committing violence against animals. Again, it is said that a person drinking wine simply for enjoyment is a great sinner, and that unbriddled enjoyment of the ma-káras is not different from the enjoyment by the lower animals. The ma-káras are thus regarded as helping a sádhaka attain liberation or enlightenment, only when they are made use of according to scriptural injunctions and with proper self-control.

But the question still remains as to how these ma-karas, which are diametrically opposed to spirituality, can help a sadhaka in his spiritual progress. In reply to this, we have to say that sadhana or spiritual endeavour is of two kinds, namely, nivrtti-marga or the path of renunciation and pravrttimarga or the path of enjoyment.17 According to the first path, a sádhaka is required to fight directly against those mental and physical tendencies that are opposed to spiritual progress. Here the aspirant is to maintain rigorous self control through abhyasa or the practice and vairagya or detachment and to destroy the tendencies of desire, lust, greed etc. to the root. And for this purpose, he is to give up the enjoyment of all those things that are liable to arouse these mental tendencies. In the path of pravrtti, on the other hand, a sádhaka is not to destroy the mental tendencies natural to human beings; nor is he required to give up those things of enjoyment that are liable to arouse these tendencies. It is through bhoga or enjoyment, declare the sastras of this path, that a sadhaka can attain yoga enlightenment or liberation. But bhoga as such cannot lead a sadhaka to enlightenment or liberation. It is bhoga through the purification or divinisation of the natural human tendencies that can lead a sadhaka to spiritual enlightenment. This purification or divinisation is possible, when the natural human tendencies are directed towards the Lord or the Mother. That means, when the sádhaka enjoys anything, he is to think and realise that the object of his enjoyment is but a manifestation of the Lord or the Mother. Accordingly, a sádhaka is here allowed to enjoy all those things for which he has a natural attachment. What the sádhaka is required to practise is that he should think and realise the bliss derived from the enjoyment of those things to be the bliss of Brahman or the Mother. A sádhaka by a regular pursuance of this practice, can transport his mind to the divine land lying beyond the land of material enjoyment. It is therefore said in Tantra that a sádhaka can ríse to the spiritual plane with the help of those things that are liable to bring downfall in the life of man. 18 The significance here is that, a sádhaka is to enjoy divine bliss in the very enjoyment of the worldly things, and thus try to detach his mind from the objects of worldly enjoyment. When a sadhaka is successful in this practice, the whole world reappears to him as divine. This clearly shows that pravrtti-márga is simply a step towards nivrtti-márga. And it is this pravrtti-márga is simply a step towards nivrtti-márga. And it is this pravrtti-márga that is prescribed in Tantra. Tantra therefore says that in it prayrtti is transformed into nivrtti, or rather, bhoga reappears as yoga.19 This path is meant particularly for those who lead a domestic life, and also for those who are not capable of practising rigorous self-control

It is now clear that the five ma-káras are prescribed in Tantra from the viewpoint of pravrtti-márga. Here the sádhaka is required to realise, at the time of enjoying the ma-káras, that the enjoyment he gets is but a manifestation of the bliss of Brahman. In other words, he should enjoy Brahmánanda through the enjoyment of the worldly things. A point to be noted here is that all the enjoyments of the world originate, in reality, from Brahmánanda. The ordinary people cannot realise this because of ignorance and the resulting impurity of the mind, which impose limitations of their enjoyment of bliss. A sádhaka who, through proper practices directs his mind towards the Supreme, can destroy this ignorance and the resulting impurity of the mind. As a result, the limitations imposed by ignorance and the impurity of the mind vanish and the unlimited divine bliss reveals itself. This is what is called 'divinisation.' When a sádhaka is successful in divinising his natural human tendencies, he finds no difference between good and bad or between truth and falsity. To him, the so-called evil deed is revealed as a good deed; the untrue, as true; the undrinkable as drinkable; the uneatable, as eatable; and the unenjoyable as enjoyable.²⁰ The practice with the ma-karas, thus, shows the path of divinisation and teaches us how to infinitise our finite enjoyment.

In reply to the second question, we may say, from an analysis of the natural human tendencies, that it is certainly possible to rise to the plane of pure and divine bliss through worldly enjoyment. If we can enjoy worldly things as Brahman, our enjoyment becomes pure and deep, as a result of which our natural tendencies rise to a divine plane. The enjoyment of the beauty of a flower becomes purer and deeper, when that beauty is enjoyed and realised as the beauty of Brahman. Such an enjoyment destroys the bounds imposed on us by the mindbody, and unites us with the unbounded bliss of Brahman. In the same way, the bliss derived from the enjoyment of the makaras rises to an infinite and divine plane, when it is realised as identical with the bliss of Brahman. The truth of this position is attested by the life-histories of numerous sádhakas.

Of the five ma-karas, the fifth one called maithuna or sexrelation has naturally become the object of worst criticism. To clarify the position, káma or lust is regarded as the greatest obstacle to spiritula progress, and it is the sex-relation or relation between the male and female that enkindles the fire of lust.²¹ Hence, the question naturally comes: how can sexrelation be regarded as a path for spiritual progress? To this, our reply is that, in Tantra, a sadhaka is advised not to enjoy his female associate through the feeling of lust, but to look upon and enjoy her as a human representation of the Divine Mother — to transform the woman into Mother. Likewise, a sadhika or female aspirant is also advised to look upon and enjoy her mate associate as a human representation of Siva.

In reality, káma or lust and preman or love are but two aspects of the same psychological attitude. If we can turn the direction of káma towards the Lord or the Mother, it reveals itself as preman. Great sages of ages have shown in their practical lives that káma can be transformed into preman and that, accordingly, all the conditions evoking kama can be transformed into conditions evoking preman. We have already referred to the event of an assembly of the Tantrikas where the head of the circle and his female associate embraced each other in a naked position and were absorbed in samadhi. Krsnadasa Kaviraja in his Caitanya-caritamrta informs us that Ramananda Raya, a Vaisnava-saint and devotee of Sri Caitanya. used to practise with some devadasis - girls in the services of the deities in a temple - as his associates. Ramananda Raya used to bathe these girls in his own hands, ornaments them and apply perfume to their bodies. And while doing so, he used to be absorbed in the plane of divine realisation. We cannot doubt the sanctity of the behaviour of Raya and the height of his realisation, because of the fact that a great saint and staunch follower of self-control like Sri Caitanya paid his highest tributes to Raya, saying that he was matchless in his self-control, and that like a stone he ever remained unmoved by the felling of lust. Great devotees like Candidasa, Vilvamangala and Jayadeva also used to practise with their female associates. In the life of Sri Ramakrishna also, we find that one day, by the direction of his lady-preceptor Bhairavi Brahmani, he had to sit on the lap of a naked, beautiful and full-grown girl; but even in this condition he remained unmoved by lust and behaved like a child. The key to the attainment of such a mental balance lies in the divinisation or motherisation of woman, It will not be out of place to mention here that Srikrsna's Rasasport with the gopis was played in such a divine plane. And through the practice of maithuna, Tantra teaches us this great secret of divinisation or motherisation of woman.

We may thus conclude that all the practices with the makáras teach us to divine the objects of our attachment or enjoyment. When a sádhaka is successful in this divinisation, he sees that the material ma-káras are transformed into the spiritual ma-karas. In other words, in this plane, he enjoys the ma-karas in their symbolic or spiritual senses as representing different planes of spiritual realisation. He now derives the greatest pleasure from the enjoyment of the nectar of the bliss Brahman [madya]; the whole of his existence [mudra] including the prana-vayu or vital air [matsya] is realised by him as identical with the existence of the Supreme; all the actions relating to his mind-body are brought under his control [mansa]; and his self becomes fully absorbed in Brahman [maithuna].

Of course, it is very risky to practise with the ma-karas, particularly, with maithuna, as in this path there is very chance of downfall at every step. The Kularnava-Tantra therefore says that these practices are more dangerous than walking through the edge of a sword, or clasping the neck of a tiger or catching hold of snake. That is why the practices with the ma-karas are generally kept secret within the circle of a selected few, and great religious teachers concerned with the mass do never propagate them.

REFERENCES

- madyam mánsam tathá matsyam mudrá maithunam eva ca. sakti-pujá-vidhávádye pañca-tattvam prakirtitam — Mahanirvana-Tántrá, 5. 22; see also Mundamala-Tantra, 2. 59.
- tasmán matsyán vivarjayet Manu-Samhita, 5, 15; nivarteta sarva-mansasya bhaksanát — ibid, 5, 48.
- na mánsa-bhaksane doso na madye na ca maithune, pravrttir esa bhuanam nivrttis tu maháphatá — ibid. 5, 56.
- 4. soma-dhárá ksared yá tu brahma-randhrád varanane. pityanánda-mayim tam yah sa eva madya-sevakah. masabdad rasana jneya tad-amsan rasana priye. sada yo bhaksayed devi sa eva mansa-sadhakah. ganga-yamunayor madhye matsyau dvau caratah sada. tau matsyau bhaksayed yas tu sa bhaven matsya-sadhakah. asa-trsna-jugupsa-bhaya-visada-ghrna-mana lajjabhisangah. brahma-gnavasta mudrah para sukrtir nah japacyamanah samastat. tada jato mahanando brahma-jnanau sudurlabham. átmani ramate yasmád atmárámas tad-ucyate --- Ágamasara.

- 5. yad-uktam paramam brahma nirvikáram nirañjanam, tasmin pramadana-jñánam tan madyam parikirtitam, evam mám sanoti hi yat karma tan mamsam parikirtitam, matsyamanam sarva-bhúte sukha-duhkham idam priye, asat-sangamudránam yat tan mudrá parikirtitá, kula-kundalini saktir dehinam deha-dharini, taya sivasya sauyogo maithunam parikirtitam — quoted by Svami Nigamananda, Tantrik Guru, pp. 18-9.
- 6. vyoma-pankaja-nihsyanda-sudhá-pána-rato narah, sudhá-pánam ímam proktam ítare madya-payinah, punyapunya-pasum hatvá jñána-khadgena yogavit, pare layam nayec cittam palási sa nigadyate, manasa cendriya-ganam samyamyatmani yojayet, matsyasi sa bhaved devi....pará-sakty-atma-mithuna-sadryogananda-nirbharah, ya aste maithunam tat syád apare stri-nisevakah Kularnava-Tantra, 8, 108-112.
- 7. See Mahanirvana-Tantra, 8, 103-111.
- sahasráropari bindau kundayá melanam sive, maithunam sayanam divyám yatinam parikittitam — Yogini-Tantra, 6, 41; kundalya milanad bindoh sravate yat paramrtam, pived yogi mahesani satyam satyam varanane — Yogini-Tantra.
- uttamás trividhá matsyah sála-pathina-rohitáh Mahanirvana-Tantra, 6. 8; mánsam trividham proktam jala-bhucara-khecaram — ibid, 6. 5; gaudi palsti tatha madhví trividha cottamá surá— ibid, 6. 2; see also Kularnava-Tantra, Ch. 5; candrabimba-nibha subhra sati-tandula-sambhava yava-godhumajá vapi ghrta-pakva-manohará — quoted by Svami Nigamananda, op cit p. 31.
- svakiya kevala jneya sarva-dosa-vivarjita Mahanirvana-Tantra, 6, 14.
- 11. vide P. K. Chattopadhyay, Tantrabhilasir Sàdhusanga, vol. 1, pp. 237-8.
- 12. sakti-prádhányád bhávanám trayanam sádhakasya ca. dívyavìra-pasúnam ca bháva-trayam udáhrtam — Rudra-Yamala, quoted by Svami Nigamananda, op cit. p. 43.
- 13. See Yogini-Tantra, Ch. 6, Kulärnava-Tantra, Ch. 5 and C. L. Gautam, Tantra-máhavijñan, pp. 245-72.
- divyánám caiva vianám sádhana bhava-sádhanam —

- Mundamàlà-Tantra, 2. 59; pasor na divya-virayoh Yogini-Tantra, 6. 14; see C. L. Gautam, op cit, vol. I, pp. 250-72. and Brahmarsi Satyadeb, Puja-tattva, pp. 169-70.
- 15. pañca-tattvam viná půjá abhicáráya kalpate, nesta-siddhir bhavet tasya vighnás tasya pade pade Mahánirvána-Tantra, 5, 23; kulá-cáram viná devi sakti-mantro na siddhidah ibid, 5, 21; see also Matrka-bheda-Tantra, 3, 32, 3, 38 and 4,9 and also Kularnava-Tantra, 7, 100.
- 15 (a) vide Sri Sri Ramakrishna-kathámrta, Reflect Publication, Calcutta, pp. 236, 335, 952.
- mádi-pañcakam isáni devatá-pritaye sudhih Kulárnava-Tantra, 10.6; svecchayá pasuvat ránam pasu-pánam itiritam Mahánirvána-Tantra, 7.95; see also Kulárnava-Tantra, 2. 118-32 and 5, 110, and also Nila-Tantra, 9. 2-4 and Meru-Tantra.
- pravrttam ca nivrttam ca dvividham karma vaidikam Manu-Samhitá.
- yair eva patanam dravyaih siddhis tair eva codită Kulărnava-Tantra, 5, 48.
- bhoga-yogatmakam kaulam ibid, 2. 24; bhoga yogayate
 ibid, 2. 25.
- anacarah sadacaras tv-akaryam, karyam uttamam, asatyam api satyam syat kaulikanam kulesvari, apeyam api peyam syad abhak-syam bhaksyam eva ca, agamyam api gamyam syat kaulikanam kulesvari — ibid, 9, 57.
- 21. ef. jahi satrum mahavaho kamarupam durasadam Bhagavad-Gita, 3, 43.

AUSTRAL OF THE PROPERTY OF THE

Chapter-6
Gradations of Approaching the Divine

~ W

Chapter-6

Vì

Gradations of Approach

The natural state of communion is the highest; meditation and concentration are the middle; japa and chants of praise lower; ritual and outer worship are the lowest.

(9.34)

THERE are several modes of approach and communion with the Divine, each appropriate to the inner development and condition of mind of the seeker. Those that are the least developed, the most extrovert, need the external material support of ritual, ceremonies, etc. for keeping themselves turned to the Divine; those who are a little more developed do not feel the need of physical modes of worship and they resort to japa and chants of praise. Those who are still further up on the ladder of evolution discard all physical and semi-physical means and take to concentration and meditation upon the object of their quest. The highest state, however, is arrived at when communion with the Divine is constant and natural: one does not need any special practice to live in the consciousness of oneness with the Divine.

GURU(I)

There is no truth greater than the Guru.

(3.113)

TO the seeker the Guru embodies the truth to be realised; the Guru it is who communicates the truth to the disciple, gives him the power to assimilate it and become one with it. Thus does the Guru represent to the disciple to Ideal to be attained and the means whereby to seek it. The Guru is all because he can give all. To the disciple there is nothing beyond the Guru.

GURU (II)

All holy actions are rooted in the Guru.

(12.14)

ALL ritual in upásaná, inner discipline, depends for its lifedynamism on the spiritual energy transmitted by the Guru in the initiation. The power which flows into the disciple when he is taught the ritualistic action by a competent Guru emerges the act and makes it alive. Without it ritual is mechanical and does not yield its intended fruit.

GURU (III)

Guru is the father, Guru is the mother, Guru is God Maheshwara Himself.

(12.49)

THE Guru is the mother who carries the seeker in the womb of his consciousness before he gives him birth into the life of the Spirit.

The Guru is the father who tends to the growth and welfare of the initiate in the difficult Path.

The Guru embodies the Lord for it is through the person of the Guru that He manifests Himself to the disciple and reaches to him His saving Grace.

GURU (IV)

Form his transcendent station, the Lord in the form of the Guru frees one from animal bonds.

(12.26)

WHAT is achieved in the disciple as a result of the force of the Guru does not depend upon the human capacities of the Guru. For it is not his personal attaintments or lack of them that decides the issue. When one surrenders oneself to the Guru, it is to the Divine Lord that one opens itself through him. And the Power of the Lord is supreme; it is not handicapped by the limitations of the human instrument; it achieves what the Lord wills.

The Divine acts through the human Guru. The Guru functions as the channel, rendering the Divine accessible to the aspirant who cannot enter into direct relation with the Divine on his own.

GURU (V)

The sight of the Guru of the Kula Path is difficult to obtain in all the worlds; only by the happy ripening of previous merits is that obtained, not otherwise.

(9.91)

THE Guru, who shows the Truth, opens the way to realise it and imparts the strength wherewith to tread it, is not secured by human effort. He appears on the scene when one is ready to receive his message, when one is developed enough, across the lives, to be able to get into the spirit of the Teaching of the Guru, to live in tune with his liberated and liberating consciousness. When the seeker is thus prepared by his past and present evolution for the decisive step, he is either taken by circumstances to where the Guru is or the Guru himself comes to him.

GURU (VI)

There is no Mantra higher than the paduka; no God higher than the Guru; no initiation higher than the sakta, and no merit higher than the Kula worship.

(12.12)

To remember and dwell in one's consciousness upon the feet of the Guru symbolised by the páduká is more effective than the repetitio of any Mantra; it is a direct communion with a living Power.

The Guru is a representative of the supreme God, an embodiment of God to the disciple. He is accessible in every way. One can have personal relation with him in a manner that is not normally possible with Deities who are nonphysical in character.

Initiation, diksa, is of several kinds, each requires its own instrumentation. But the saka diksa, direct transmission of spiritual dynamism, needs nothing by way of channel or ritual to be effective. It is spontaneous and effective instantaneously.

Men seek to acquire merit by various means — ethical, religious and others — but the best way is to accustom the consciousness to dwell upon God by a concentrated pouring of oneself upon Him — in the chosen form, — at all levels of the being, mental, emotional, physical. Only so is one effectively lifted up Godwards — and that a is the meaning of real punya.

GURU (VII)

At the root of dhyána is the form of the Guru; at the root of puja is the feet of the Guru; at the root of the mantra is the word of the Guru; and at the root of all liberation is the grace of the Guru.

(12.13)

THE Guru it is whom lies the key to the success of all sadhanas in the life spiritual.

To begin dhyána, meditation, the first step is to visualise the form of the Guru, focus all the mental faculties on it, connect oneself to the inspiration that flows from it and lead the mind in the desired direction.

Before any pújá, worship, is begun, one offers mental worship first to the feet of the Guru for it is the spiritual power that flows from the feet that effects the conjunction between the worshipper and the Deity invoked.

No mantra is truly effective unless it has been received through the mouth of the Guru. In communication the mantra, the Guru transmits his tapas-shakti to the disciple through the word and that power works in the form of the mantra.

Liberation — the culmination of all spiritual sadhana — cannot be effected by one's own strength. It is only a Power greater than one's own, from outside the range of the triple Ignorance of this creation, that can cut the final knot of bondage. And that power comes through the Grace of the Guru.

GURU (VIII)

When the superb Teacher gives to his disciple then does the disciple get liberated; there is no further birth for him.

(12.19)

THE real Guru, high of soul and full compassion, does not merely initiate the disciple and receive his adoration. He holds himself responsible for the spiritual welfare of the disciple, takes upon himself the burden of his destiny, lays open to him his own resources of the spirit and mind. The Guru not only takes the disciple into its own being but also gives himself with all his attaintments — to him. And it is the spiritual power of the Guru which passes into the being of the disciple and goes on to effect his liberation. He freed from the cycle of birth and death.

GURU AND GOD

Even when God Shiva is wroth, the Guru is the saviour; but when the Guru himself is annoyed, there is none to save.

(12.49)

IN a manner of speaking, the displeasure of the gods can be faced if the Grace of the Guru is there. For he is capable of averting the consequences of the displeasure either by his own spiritual power or by interceding with the gods. But if the Guru himself were to be displeased, then woe to the disciple! There is a deeper relation between the Guru and the disciple that normally admits of no interference.

GURU AND PARENTS

The parents are indeed to be deliberately adored because they are the cause of your birth; but the one to be worshipped especially is the Guru who shows what is dharma and what is not.

(12.48)

THE parents have a claim upon the gratitude and fealty of man because it is they who given him birth and reared him up. But the Guru is to be adored much more. For while the parents give him only physical birth, and bring him to materila life, the Guru gives a greater birth, birth into the Truth of God, opens his eyes to the right path, and launches him into a life that assures a glorious future in this world and the next.

GURU'S WORD

A single word of the Guru gives liberation; all sciences are a fraud.

(1.107)

THE various branches of learning cultivate and develop the mind in the ways of the intellect. But they do not by themselves gives liberation to man from the rounds of birth and death. At best they may bring home to him the real nature of his bondage, how his faculties are limited on every side by ignorance and division and even indicate the ways and means by which he can free himself. But the actual working out of that process of liberation cannot be done from this learning alone. It has to come from another source that is the Word of the Guru. This word is potent because it is not the speech of the common kind. It represents the expressive power of the spiritual consciousness of the Guru who has realised the Truth in himself. It is an outer means of communication of his inner state of Knowledge and tapasya to the seeker. This word implants in the being of the disciple the dynamics of the realised Truth which is self-effectuating and which really builds the way, the sádhaná in him.

HERE

If one does not remedy the ills of hades here itself, what indeed can the afflicted hope for there where medicine is not?

(1.24)

THE malady that afflicts life on earth is to be cured while one is on earth itself. For the means to do so are provided to man when he is living. He is given the faculties of understanding, vision, will. If he fails to utilise this opportunity to cure himself of the disease of ignorance, egoism and division by proper effort during his lifetime, it is idle to expect things to be better after death. In the worlds to which man departs, there are no possibilities of sudden change and cure; that can be done only on earth which is the appointed field for evolution and progress. Great is the predition, says the Upanishad, if one fails to make it here. What is there can only be a continuation of what is here.

The problem is projected here and it must be faced and solved on its own ground.

HOLY COMPANY

Company of the holy is the remedy and the cure.

(1.56)

ASSOCIATION has an influence larger than is admitted. Especially for those who seek to achieve the higher ends of life, the company of the holy is invaluable. It is not so much their words or teaching but their very presence that makes a great difference. They live normally in a higher state of consciousness, attuned to the Truth of their Ideal, and constantly emanate vibrations characteristics of their state of realisation. These vibrations of higher consciousness create a special atmosphere of purity, peace and spiritual power around them, and whoever breathes it comes under its uplifting influence. One is exposed to the higher charge all the time and without any special effort changes are seen to be initiated in his person; the good elements get nourishment and increase while the opposite ones are depressed and dwindle away. A natural change comes over as with logs of fuel, in varying conditions. getting dry and ready in the warmth of a fire.

HOLY MEN (i)

I do not dwell in Kailas nor in Meru nor in the Mandara mountains; I am there where the Knowers of the Kula-Turth are.

(9.94)

THE Divine is not to be sought in the geographical locations celebrated in mythology. Whatever the symbolic significance of these traditions, the Divine is found more easily through those who have realised the Truth of the Divine in themselves. They have perceived the Reality, attained identity with it in the depths of their being and emanate the direct vibrations of the Divinity with whom they are in union. To come under their influence, to establish contact with them and to be with them mentally, vitally and physically is a sure means to realise the Divine Reality. Not pilgrimages to distant places but company of the holy is the way.

HOLY MEN (II)

Where the Knower of the Kula-Truth lives, that place is santified.

(9.97)

HE who has realised the Truth of the Divine does not live within a closed circle of existence, cut off from all. On the contrary he radiates incessantly from every pore of his being the high Consciousness that he breathes, and all in his environs absorbs its vibrations. Everything undergoes a change. Those that are ready catch the flame of aspiration and progress with rapidity; those that are not yet ripe — the still wet logs of fuel — are warmed up and made ready, known or unknown to themselves. All quickens in pace. The stamp of his realisation is impressed on all orders of creation around him.

HUMAN BIRTH (I)

The Knowledge of the Reality cannot be obtained without human birth.

(1.14)

THE Tantra speaks of the innumerable births that the soul has to pass through before it can arrive at maturity, a condition suitable for taking and supporting the human embodiment. And this human organism alone is endowed with the means of understanding the nature of life, its goal and the way to arrive at it, in a word, of coming into possession of the Knowledge of the truth of oneself and of others, of the Truth which gives meaning to all existence. Man alone, of all creatures in life, has the intelligence, the awakened soui to acquire and wield the Knowledge of the Truth in manifestation. Human birth, thus, is a rare opportunity presented by Nature after aeons of preparation through a successive series of inferior births and it behoaves man to put it to the best use open to him and not fritter it away in lesser pursuits.

HUMAN BIRTH (II)

Human birth, ladder to liberation, is difficult to obtain. Who is more to be pitied than he who gets this birth and yet does not save himself?

(1.16)

THE human birth is a culmination of a long, long series of preparatory births in the journey of the soul; it marks a definite stage where full awakening from the sleep of Inconscience is effected and the possibility of breaking through the bondage of Ignorance by a purposive growth into the freedom of self-knowledge is placed before man. He is given all the means of will, feeling, thought by which he can outgrow the tutelage of Nature and build himself in the image of God, his creater. No other type of being in creation is given such an opportunity and the wherewithal to fulfill the great object of life, — Freedom, Light, Immortality of Consciousness. Woe unto the man who denies himself the high destiny that is spread before him!

IMAGES

Milk is formed through the entire body of the cow but it pours out only through the teats of the udder; even so the Divinity pervading everywhere radiates through the Images and the like.

(6.75)

THE Divine is indeed spread everywhere in its formless infinity. But on that account it is not all beyond perception, beyond the reach of the human faculties. The Divine reveals itself in finite Form as well. In fact all forms are ultimately the self-figurations of the Divine Being. Of these forms again, there are some which are special concentrations of the Divinity; they reveal the ensouling Divine more readily than others. Such are the Images, Idols, etc., that have come to be worshipped as significant forms and living symbols of the Divine.

IMMEDIATE

Do today what is for tomorrow, do in the forenoon what is for the afternoon; Death does not wait to see if things are done or not done.

(1.42)

IF time is fleeting, the wise man forestalls it by anticipation. He is not taken by surprise, he does not wait for the turn of things. Not only does he not postpone anything, but he always believes in completing in advance. He seizes time by the forelock and achieves in the immediate. For no one knows what the next moment has in store, what new unforeseen possibilities may not come into the situation. Besides, he knows that Death, the ender of things, is always on the prowl. And this unwelcome quest has no consideration for the convenience of man.

INNER AND OUTER (I)

There is no Mantra higher than meditation; no god higher than the Self; no worship is higher than inner pursuit; there is no fruit greater than contentment.

(9.37)

ALL practice of Mantra leads to communion with the Deity and when this communion is perfect, the consciousness dwells solely on the Deity — there is dhyána. Thus dhyána is a culmination of Mantra.

There are several gods and goddesses in the universe. They are so many emanations put out from the Supreme Creator for purposes of the manifestation. But He Himself is present in the creation, in each form in creation, as its Self. The self is the Divine itself while the gods are Powers and Personalities of Him.

The aim of all worship is to establish relation with the Deity and invoke its Presence. Outer ritual is only a support, a help. The real process is inner; the mind and the heart aspire and pour themselves in adoration and pursuit gradually leading the consciousness to oneness with the Adored.

There is fruit and fruit but the one feature common to most is fulfillment of desires. But that does not bring lasting happiness. A desire satisfied breeds another and there is no respite. There is real happiness and peace only when one is able to touch the repose of the soul within. This contentment depends upon nothing external and is the fruit of fruits.

INNER AND OUTER (II)

The one without ritual is the higher worship, silence is the higher japa, thought-free state is the higher meditation, and disrelessness the higher fruit.

(9.38)

WORSHIP is of two kinds: the one with outer ritual to support the communion is the báhya pújá, external worship; the outer and higher is the purely inner worship, a flow of adoration of the Deity with or without mental enaction of the ritual.

Japa is of two kinds: audible, with the word or words physically repeated by mouth; the other and higher is the mental, inaudible, silent, in which one dwells upon the Mantra repeating it inwardly without moving the lips.

Meditation is two kinds: the one which pursues a line of thought organised around the object chosen; the other and higher is the state without thought activity, the mind is silent without any occupying idea-movement.

And what is the fruit of all these practices? There are many kinds that are sought, e.g., material advancement, health of body and mind, affluence in heavenlier states beyond, liberation from birth and death. None of these, says the text, is worth the pursuit. The objective is to be free from desire, even the desire for liberation. Personal desire totally eliminated and displayed by the Divine Will is the ideal condition.

INNER TRUTH

To perdition he goes who regards the Guru as human, the Mantra as mere letters and the Images as stone.

(12.45)

THE true votary of the Tantra is not misled by appearances. He knows that the truth of things is within them, not on their surfaces. The Guru to him is not merely a human being like all others, albeit better endowed than the others, and he does not deal with him on that basis. The Guru represents and embodies to him the very Divine that he aspires to realise and he adores him in the light of his experience.

Similarly the Mantra he practises is not simply a string of letters set together with some rhyme or no rhyme. It is the sound-body of the Deity he prays to. It is not just a means or technique to take him to his goal. It is both the way and the goal in one.

Neither is the Image he worships merely a material figure. It is the physical Form in which the Deity is present. The Image or idol is the nodus for the meeting of the human consciousness that seeks and adores and the Divine Consciousness that manifests in response to the aspiration.

INTELLECTUAL KNOWLEDGE (I)

Not knowing the Truth within himself, the deluded one gets lost in treatises.

(1.96)

MEN study and pore over books without number in order to know the Reality. But the Truth of things is not to be found in the pages of any books; it cannot be got simply by reading. It is to be seen and experienced. And the best place to experience it is within oneself. For there one has a direct perception, an intimate feeling which is unmistakable. The Divine is in the heart of things and renders himself most accessible at this core. To withdraw the consciousness from its pre-occupations in a hundred directions outside and centre it within oneself is the surest way to become aware of the Truth stationed within and to realise it.

INTELLECTUAL KNOWLEDGE (II)

The head carries the flowers but it is the nose that gets the fragrance.

(1.95)

THE mere fact of learning and scholarship does not by itself give the power of wisdom unless one equips oneself and enters into the heart of that Knowledge. Only he who aspires for the liberative action of the Truth-Knowledge without losing himself in the intellectual formulations of it, gest its full benefit. Otherwise it remains a barren mental acquisition.

JAPA (I)

Japa is of three kinds. Japa done aloud is the lowest; Japa done in low tones is the middle; Japa done mentally is the best.

(15.54)

WHEN the Japa is done aloud (in the hearing of others) there is a tendency for the repetition to get mechanical. The sound predominates over the sense and much of the benefit is lost.

When it is done in low tones (with the movement of lips but outside the hearing of others) there is less distraction of sound. But still the effort of repetition of the words affects the concentration of the consciousness.

Such a concentration is fully possible when the Japa proceeds without verbal repetition (without any movement of lips). One dwells upon the meaning and the consciousness participates uninterruptedly in the affirmation and re-affirmation of the invocation. The letters or words are repeated very subtly within the being as supports to this flow of consciousness to the Deity.

JAPA (II)

If the repetition is too clipped, it causes disease, if too extended, it causes decay of tapas; when letters are stuck to each other, the Mantra does not fructify.

(15.55)

WHEN the japa is done one much be careful to see that the letters are pronounced with full regard to their form and individuality. No letters shall be suppressed or only partly pronounced; to give them only partial expression results in suppression of health. So also if in pronunciation the letters are unduly extended, it results in wastage of spiritual energy. Care should be taken to utter each letter distinctly so that each sound-vibration has its full course. Only so is Japa fruitful.

JAPA (III)

How can there be fulfillments if learning is acquired for the sake of debate, Japa done for the sake of another, gifts given for the sake of fame!

(15.102)

JAPA in sadhana is meant to enter into the consciousness of the Deity and become one with it. It is only the Japa that is done with this sole objective that is spiritually fulfilling. One learns to forget oneself more and more completely and, at the best, becomes the Deity itself. But if the Japa is undertaken for the sake of another, in order to work for the spiritual welfare of somebody else, it cannot be equally successful. For it is a matter is cultivating one's consciousness and leading it to contact and live in the greater consciousness of the Deity. It is for each person to make the effort and work out the process in himself. In this filed there can be no Japa by proxy.

JAPA (IV)

If the mind be in one place, Shiva in another, Shakti in another and life-breath still in another place, even a crore of Japa is useless.

(15.10)

FOR Japa to be fruitful it is indispensable that all the consciousness is concentrated and poured into it. Distractions and disorganised states of mind and feeling are an impediment. The mind must be gathered round the object of the Japa; the active consciousness (Shakti) must coverage on it all its currents; the passive being (Shiva) must be fully turned to the effort; and the life-breath must be geared to the repetition, for only so can the mind with all its faculties be easily quieted and focussed on the Japa.

JAPA AND DHYANA

When tired by Japa, take to Dhyana; tired to Dhyana; take again Japa. Of him who does both Japa and Dhyana, the Mantra achieves most.

(15.13)

A JUDICIOUS combination of Japa and Dhyana (Meditation) makes the sadhana less strenuous and more fruitful. When the mind shows signs of exhaustion due to long concentration on the repetition of the Mantra, it should be relaxed into meditation on the meaning and significance of the Mantra. The mind must be allowed to follow the unrolling of the Idea in the Mantra; this release of the thought-energies gives rest to the nerves and the being soon gets restored to normalcy. But if the mind is allowed to stay too long in this state of release, thoughts beging to wander and a tiredness of aimless movement sets in. It is then time to draw back all the faculties and focus them in the concentration on Japa. Thus both Japa and Dhyana are the two wheels upon which the upásaná moves to its destination.

JAPA AND STOTRA

Stotra, laudation, remembered mentally, the Mantra repeated verbally, are both useless like water in a broken vessel.

(15.56)

STOTRA, hymn of praise, is intended to be clearly articulated in words, expressed in its full sound-values and thus affirmed in the physical universe. The physical vibrations so released create an atmosphere, form a magnetic field as it were, and the Presence of the Deity that is lauded is successfully invoked on the spot.

The Mantra is to be dwelt upon in one's consciousness so that the Deity ensouling the Mantra gradually yields itself to the consciousness that is concentrated upon it. Mere verbal repetition remains only on the surface without affecting the inner domains of the being where the contact is to take place.

JIVA AND SHIVA

Jiva is Shiva; Shiva is Jiva; the Jiva pure is Shiva. When the bonds it is Jiva; freed from bonds it is Sadashiva.

(9.42)

THE soul associated with Nature, involved in its movements, is Jiva. In itself it is a portion, amsa, of the Divine. The Divine projects itself into the manifestation and this projection is the soul. When the soul is involved in the activities of life-nature it gets covered but its essential character is not affected. The moment it frees itself from the trappings forged in the process of the evolution in which it is cast, its innate character as a self-formulation of the Divine becomes patent.

JUST USE

Do not cut off even a blade of grass uselessly.

(5.46)

CREATION has a meaning and a purpose. Everything in the world has a significance; each thing — big or small — has its place in the total scheme. And to destroy anything in life regardless of the use for which it is intended is a wanton interference with the order of Cosmic Nature. This is not to say that nothing should be utilised. Everything is to be used for the purpose for which it is put forth by Mother-Nature, but not missed or wasted. As an awakened being, man has a special responsibility in this regard. One must learn to understand the intention in Nature, put oneself in tune with it and act in consonance with its will. That is the sign and the way of progress.

KARMA

Of what is done here the fruit is obtained elsewhere; of the tree whose roots are watered the fruits show on the branches.

(1.53)

EVERY action has its reaction — now or latter, it is in vain to hope to escape the consequences of one's doings in life here by going away elsewhere.

Whatever be the worlds to which one goes, the impulsions generated during the bodily life on earth follow man in his subtler bodies and insist on working themselves out. This may be effected partly in the period between death and reembodiment and partly in subsequent births. The laws of Karma are, as a rule, ineluctable.

KAULA(I)

Away from misery, contended, devoid of qualities, free from jealousy, given to the Knowledge of the Doctrine, peaceful, the Kaula is always devoted to the Divine.

(9.84)

THE true Kaula - participant of the Kaula Dharma in the Tantra tradition harmonising the Truth of the Divine Being with the manifestation of the Divine Consciousness-Force — is to be distinguished not from external marks of appearance, ritual etc., but be the grade of the consciousness he has attained. He is one who is not lost in the miseries of the petty world of desires, disappointments and afflictions common to most. He is content with what is given to him by the Divine, finds his source of happiness with in hinself. He is not subject to the currents of likes and dislikes, good and evil, that sweep the mind off its balance. He does not burn himself with envy at the good fortune of others. He knows and lives in the Truth of the Divine, its Oneness, its overpowering Bliss. Nothing disturbs him; he is ever at peace, with himself and with the world. All his attention, all his energies flow towards the Divine. the supreme object of his adoration.

KAULA (II)

Without insolence, anger, show, desire and ego, truthful in speech, not enslaved to the senses, the master of the Kauia path is steady, not fickle.

(9.85)

BUT on that account, because of his high status, the Kaula is not proud, not haughty; he does not show off his powers or his knowledge to impress upon the less fortunate and gain a following. He is rooted in the divine centre within, not in the ego; he is not swayed by the impulses of nature, but is governed by the impulsions of the soul, the Truth within and he expresses in speech and action only what is consistent with that verity. He is firmly set in his pursuit of the Ideal and nothing can distract him.

SELF-REVEALING

Not by thinking but by itself alone is the Reality revealed. (9.10)

THE Divine cannot be thought out. No amount of reasoning, thought deliberation can bring one face to face with the Reality of the Divine. Normally such mental activity only weaves a thought-web around the person. At the most, mental deliberation can process the mind, free it from its dross of materiality and vital colouring and prepare it for a higher growth. But it cannot seize the Divine even in its highest flight. The Divine is beyond. It reveals itself by its own choice and if the being is ready it can receive and imbibe the revelation. Thinking can be an aid but never the means to realise the Divine.

SHIVA-SHAKTI

The world is made of Shiva and Shakti.

(2.83)

THE universe is not a transient product of an illusive Power. It is a creation of a divine Puissance, Shakti, that not only puts it out into birth but builds it into a progressive manifestation of the Divine. She is there in the creation, omnipresent, omniscient, omnipotent, as the Consciousness that informs and guides, as the Force that executes. But this Consciousness-Force, cit-sakti, is not alone. The Power is of one who wields it, the Sákti belongs to the Sakta; the Consciousness is of the Being, the Shiva, the Supreme Existent. It is emanated by and based upon Shiva; it brings out into manifestation what is contained in the illimitable Being of Shiva. In fact, the Shakti is none other than Shiva himself, Shiva as Shakti. Wherever Shakti is, there is Shiva too - whether in this world or any other. The Truth is One, revealing itself in its double aspect when turned to manifestation, and all that is manifest is constituted of this double truth of existence.

SINS OF THE DISCIPLE

The blemish of the minister touches the king; the blemish of the wife, the husband; and the sins of the disciple, without doubt, are visited upon the teacher.

(11.109)

When the Guru accepts one as disciple, he takes him into himself, makes him part of his own being and, in the process, takes his destiny upon himself. He shares his life with the disciple. There is an intermingling of the two consciousness till they become one. Naturally all that the disciple does — his thoughts, his words, his actions — has its own reactions in the being of the Guru and his Karam affects the Guru.

This is how the collective sins of the disciples, even devotees, come to leave a mark on the body of the Guru and even inflict physical damage upon it.

SUPREME TRUTH

Some seek the truth non-dual, others the truth dual. But they do not know my Truth which exceeds both.

(1.10)

PHILOSOPHERS dispute endlessly about the nature of the reality. Some hold that the Reality is one which does not permit any other; all else that seems to be is only an appearance, there cannot be anything else other than the sole, absolute, One. There are others who challenge this position and assert that there are always two truths -- God and Nature, Spirit and Matter — and all is an interaction, a play of the Two. And so the disputations go on, each proclaiming his own view as the sole truth. The real truth of the matter, however, is that the Reality is above all mind-made distinctions. It is an omnipresent Reality which permits many possible experiences of it corresponding to the viewpoints from which it is perceived; it is the supreme Truth in which all experiences and the statements based upon them find their reconciliation. It is none of them solely but contains all of them in its integrality and exceeds them in its transcendence of all formulations.

TANTRA SADHANA (I)

From the muladhara go up to the brahmarandhra again and again; bliss issues out of his meeting of the Kundalini Shakti and the Moon of Full Consciousness. What flows from this lotus in the supreme Ether is the wine, the real wine to be lasted by man; what is drunk otherwise, is only liquor.

(5.107.8)

HERE is the sadhana of the Tantra and its ecstatic fulfillment in a nutshell. Awaken the concentrated dynamism of Power laying coiled up at the base of the spine in the body and lead it upwards in the system by appropriate means of Dhyana, Japa etc. and take it to the summit of the consciousness of supreconscience. When the two meet, the Power rising from below — the Kundalini — and the super-consciousness awaiting above — the Sanasrara — there is a flow of pure bliss. This is the real ecstasy, the yield of the mystic wine that is celebrated in the Tantra, and not the intoxication caused by the physical substance called wine which can be quaffed by any body without having to go through the elaborate and strenuous processes of the sadhana. Material wine is only an outer symbol in ritual of this inner flowing

TANTRA SADHANA (II)

Knowing yoga, cut asunder, with the sword of knowledge, the animal of duality — merit and demerit, and merge the consciousness in the Supreme. That is the true eating of meat.

(5.109)

THE animal to be sacrificed is not the four-legged quadruped that is the victim of common superstition, but the notion of good and bad, the obsession of duality that dogs the footsteps of man. This constant preoccupation with what is good and what is bad, what stores up merit and what accumulates demerit creates an unhealthy self-occupation that stands in the way of true enlargement and freedom in consciousness. Besides good and bad are very relative terms; what is good at one time, at one stage of development, becomes not good at another, what is bad now may turn out to be good later on. To eliminate this involvement in the net of papa and punya and find one's level in a consciousness that transcends both is the real way.

TANTRA SADHANA (III)

Bring the host of the sense under control by the mind and yoke them to the self. That is the true eating of fish; all else is simply to hurt the creatures.

(5.110)

THE senses are ever on the move, dragging the mind with them into the world of their objects. Man is always prone to this distraction of the sense and consequently fails to make the best of the opportunity and the time given to him. Instead of being his own master, able to direct and utilise the circumstances around him for his proper advancement, he is a slave of the senses, helplessly drifting wherever they lead. Bring these senses under thy controls, calls the scripture, let thy mind assert its rightful mastery over prána in whose current the senses are running. Once the pránic energy is controlled, all the sense-motions are automatically absorbed and the way is open to place the sense under the direction of the soul.

This is the true 'eating', the just utilisation of the senses and the objects for the feeding of the soul-experience for growth, not the indulging of the senses for their own satisfaction.

TANTRA SADHANA (IV)

The Woman to be waited Waited is the Shakti that is dormant in the animal man but awake in the votary of the Path.

The rush of bliss that ensues upon the meeting of the Pair, the Supreme Shakti and the Self above, is the real Congress; all else is mere copulation.

(5.111-12)

THERE is a divine Power latent in man waiting to be awakened into action. All the powers that are normally active and make life possible are only derivations, diminutions, secondary formulations of this Mother-Power that is dormant within. This puissance, the Shakti, is to be awakened, aroused into an upward movement towards the Self, the Pure Consciousness situated at the highest centre of the being of man. And when this union between the Shakti darting from its seat below in the lotus of the Muladhara and the Lord waiting above in the lotus of infinite petals, the Sahasrara, is effected in the consciousness of the practitioner there is an ebullition of intense Ananda.

That is the true Congress, the real bliss that is aimed at, not the physical interchange at the animal level.

UPASANA

Without upásaná the Presence does not fructify.

(6.79)

THE Divine is indeed present everywhere, especially in the human body. But that by itself does not make any difference to man unless he takes steps to realise it in his consciousness. Self-awareness, self-purification, adoration and evocation of the indwelling Divine are the main steps for awakening this Presence in his consciousness and making it a dynamic power in life. Such an inner discipline is indispensable to prepare and raise the human system to the level of that purity and intensity in seeking which alone can move the Divine to reveal and manifest itself in the person of the seeker. Otherwise the potentiality remains untapped and dormant.

UPASANA GRADATIONS

Laudation is worth a billion of worships; japa, a billion of laudation; meditation, a billion of japas; and absorption is worth a billion of meditations.

(9.36)

THERE is a gradation in the discipline, sadhana that leads to the Divine. Worship, with external means to support the dedication, is the first with which the communion starts. The next is less physical: it is the repetition and dwelling upon the Name or the Word of invocation of the Deity. Higher than that is the mental way of meditation on the form and truth of the Deity. Highest of all is the state of oneness that is the culmination of all successful meditation: one is absorbed into the object of pursuit — the condition of samadhi. There is thus a steady progression in this discipline: physical, semi-physical, mental, spiritual. The character of the means keeps with the nature of the developing consciousness.

VEDA

There is no science greater than the Veda.

(3.113)

THE Veda is the revealed knowledge. It is cherished as the Word which has issued from the Supreme along with the words that constitute the universe. It holds all the knowledge of the truths of Man, Nature and God, the way to harmonies them in oneself, effect the junction of Nature and God in oneself and fulfil the cosmic purpose in the manifestation. It contains the key to the problems of life in the institution of Sacrifice which is an outer symbol of the inner process of consecration and self-surrender by man to the Divinity (in appropriate forms) calling forth the birth of the gods of divine Knowledge, Power, Bliss and Harmony in his hallowed being.

VEDA AND TANTRA

Know the truth of the Veda to be the Doctrine of the Kaula. (2.85)

THE Tantra is not alien to the Veda. The truth that ensouls the Tantra is essentially the substance of the Veda. The truth of a Divine Reality pervading all forms in existence, all states of consciousness and power in creation, the possibility of man awaking to this true nature of life, and himself developing into a live instrument of the Divine, participating in the cosmic Play of the Supreme — all these basic truths of the Veda enter into the structure of the Tantric system. The Tantra represents a continuation, an enlarged application suited to the developing mind of humanity, of the Vedic tradition.

VERBAL KNOWLEDGE

Verbal knowledge is not adequate to destroy the delusions of the worldly rounds. By mere talk of the lamp the darkness does not recede.

1.97)

THE Ignorance that holds man in slavery to inferior Nature cannot be dispelled by a reading of books or instructions by mouth. Words remain mere words and are ineffective. At best they give a mental understanding of the problem but no more. The solution has to come from elsewhere. It is only by living the knowledge, by building it as a live force for change in the consciousness, that the liberation can be effected. It is not enough to know and say that a lamp can remove darkness, it is necessary to fetch it and keep it alight on the scene.

WINE

If by the mere drinking of wine one were to attain perfection, all drunkard-creatures would be perfect.

(2.117)

IT is a common notion that in the Tantra wine-drinking is a means of spiritual perfection. If that were really so, says the text, all the low types of men that are addicted to drink would have reached the supreme state. Note the word pamarah, low creatures, used to describe those that take to the intoxicating drink. One who aims high can never resort to this type of drink which weakens and ultimately breaks the will which is the fulcrum of all determination and effort of man. It is a delusion to think that the sense of abandonment that comes over the senses on taking alcohol can be a means or a foretaste of the real freedom of the soul. Actually it is a precursor of the disintegration of the centralising power of will.

WORSHIP (1)

Worship with the instruction of the Guru.

(6.5)

TO worship is to commune with the Deity. To take and follow a set of procedure of rituals by oneself is not the way to do it. One must first receive the initiation, the authority to hold communion with the Guru. For the Guru is one who has realised in himself, in whatever measure, the reality of the Deity and can put others in relation to that Deity by means of his tapaspower. When he initiates, he implants this connecting power in the being of the disciple and the outer ritual is only a physical support to the repeated affirmation and building up of this relation. Without this authorisation and charge from the Guru, mere ritualistic worship is ineffective.

WORSHIP (II)

Worship the Sri Chakra by uniting the Mantra.

(6.9)

TO worship by mechanically repeating the prescribed Mantras is no true worship. The Mantra is the sound-body of the Deity. Each Deity has its Mantra. To reach the Deity the most natural way is to approach through the Mantra that is its sound-form. And that can be done not by simply uttering the letters that constitute the Mantra, but by joining, yoga, one's consciousness to the Idea, the Truth that is ensouled in the Mantra. By thinking upon the Idea in the Mantra, by dwelling upon it in the consciousness, and constantly affirming it in oneself while repeating the Mantra, one imbibes the vibrations of the Deity and moves closer and closer to it. This growing communion leading to an eventual union is the object of worship.

WORSHIP (III)

Set aside the faded petals of Ignorance and worship with the consciousness of 'He and I'.

(9.42)

WHILE worshipping the Divine do not offer to him the state flowers of thy desires, passions, ignorant movements. Throw them behind thee and realise that thou art another, not a creature of Ignorance. Know it in thy heart that thou art none other than He, the Divine, affirm this truth in thy consciousness and in this feeling of identity offer thy worship. So with thou grew into the likeness of thy ideal.

WORSHIP (IV)

Arouse the soul-force to its full potency and satisfy the Deities in the body.

(6.96)

THE body of man is conceived to be an miniature universe in itself. The various cosmic Deities occupy appropriate stations in the various limbs of the body. They are to be awakened and activised to participate in the worship. And the means to do it is to arouse the innate power of the soul which is for the most part inactive and behind the veil. The Shakti lying dormant is to be aroused by concentration and evocation with the aid of the Mantra and directed upwards where She meets the Lord seated in the sahasrara and the shower of Bliss ensues. The Deities presiding over the several limbs of the body share in this celestial downpour, become contented and join the whole movement of worship.

WORSHIP (V)

Worship with exclusive concentration.

(6.71)

WORSHIP is not a mechanical duty to be somehow completed. The invocation of the Divinity, its reception, adoration, self-surrender and finally, the termination of the meeting, are parts of a soul-process of growth into godhood and they call for all the attention and concentration of the mind that the practitioner is capable of. If the hands participate in the ritual without the proper consciousness in them, if the mouth merely parrots the formulas without the mind and the heart dwelling upon the sense in them if one is only bodily present on the scene of worship while the mind wanders elsewhere, then the purpose of worship is not served. Not only the mind but all the faculties of the being must learn to converge on the object of worship.

WORSHIP (VI)

If, fickle-minded, you call one Deity and worship another, you receive the curses of both.

(6.91)

BEFORE one undertakes worship and invokes a Deity, one must be firm in one's faith in that Deity. If, in the absence of such faith, one changes the object of the Call in the course of the upásana, prefers another Deity losing faith in the one already invoked, then one offends both. The first Deity is called but left unattended; the second is offered worship that has been already dedicated in spirit and tasted in part by another. It is disrespect to both.

YANTRA

As the body is to the juva, as oil is to the lamp, so is yantra the established seat of all the Deities.

(6.87)

THE Deity needs a physical nodus to function in the physical world. And that need is provided by the Yantra which is a diagrammatic form corresponding to the configuration of the forces that accompany the manifestation of the Deity on its own plane. When this figure — revealed to the vision of the Seer in his tapasya — is drawn and concentrated upon, it recreates, as it were, the very conditions in which the Deity became manifest originally and the Deity is moved to manifest in the Yantra.

Thus the Yantra is more than a symbol. It is the body of the Deity.

YANTRA AND MANTRA

The Yantra is ensouled by the Mantra, and the Deity is in the form of the Mantra.

(6.85)

WORSHIP of the Yantra is the same as worship of the Deity. For each Yantra is the form-pattern of a particular Deity. It represents diagrammatically the configuration of the lines of manifestation of the Deity. The soul of the Yantra — what gives life to it — is the Mantra that is used to consecrate and energies it. And this Mantra again, is the sound-pattern of the Deity. Each Deity has its characteristic sound-vibrations and they constitute its sound body which is revealed to the audition of the Seer in the form of the Mantra.

YOGA

The union of the jiva and the Self is Yoga.

(9.30)

THE being of man is one in its essence with the Divine Self which bases and supports all life. But it is not aware of this divine origin and character because it is involved in the operations of Nature in Ignorance. By awakening to this truth of himself and by the adoption of a psychological and spiritual discipline, it is possible for man to disengage himself from his many-sided involvement in the life of Ignorance, increase the awareness of his true nature, gradually grow into the consciousness of the Self within and eventually realise his identity with it. This union — and the means to it — is Yoga.

YOGIN (I)

The yogin should regularly perform sandhya without mantra and water, austerity without puja and fire-sacrificial, worship without ceremonies.

(9.39)

THE yogin does not need to undergo all the ritualistic exercise that the ordinary man does to gain communion with the Divine. But he continues the modes of communion though he dispenses with the active supports which are no longer necessary in his stage of development.

The yogin dwells in his consciousness on the Divine at peak periods. He undergoes continuous self-disciplining of the mind, life and body. His being flows in adoration towards the Divine, even in submission and self-consecration. Meditation, concentration of will, adoration of the Divine, are integral parts of his effort.

Chapter-7 GLOSSARY

The state of the s

Chapter-7

The vast Tantra literature contains a large number of technical terms and words which are not commonly used. Here we have noted only such words as are often necessary for the study of Tantras.

For the convenience of those who are interested only in the scientific elements in Tantra, we have given a separate list containing exclusively the scientific terms, based mainly on the Rasarnava.

In English Alphabetical Order

Abhicára

A rite designed to harm others. Sáradátilaka, Saktisamaama.

Abhiseka

Consecration of the Tántric devotee who has holy water sprinkled over him. It is of two broad kinds: Sáktábhiseka and Púrnábhiseka.

Saradatilaka (Raghavabhatta's comm. iv. 1). Pranatosini. Saktisamgama.

Àcára

Rules of conduct as means of spiritual attainment. There are generally seven kinds of such rules; e.g., Veda, Vaisnava, Saiva, Daksina, Vadma, Siddhanta, Kaula. These are comprised in two main categories, viz., Vama and Daksina. Kaulamarga-rahasya, Pranatosini, Matrkabheda.

Àdhára

Literally, receptacle. The Cakra (q.v.), supposed to exist in the lowest extremity of the spinal cord, is called Múládhara.

Nilatantra.

Adhah-ámnáya

One of the six geographical divisions presided over by Buddhist and Jain deities, Vagisvari, Vajrayogini, Nairrtesvari, etc.

Pranatosini,

Saktis mgama, Sundari,

Advas'ofhana

Procedure of purifying the body consisting of six adhvas, viz., varna, pada, mantra, kala, tattva, and bhuvana.

Saradatilaka (Raghavabhatta's comm. on it),

Àdyá Saktí

Primeval energy conceived as a goodess.

Aghamarsana

Literally meaning the wiping off of the sin from the body. It is done by sprinkling water on different parts of the body.

Tantrasara of Krsnananda (on authority of Malinitantra,

Àgháta

Pránáyama.

Aghora

(1) A form of Siva, black and fierce, supposed to preside over the Southern region.

Pránatosinì, (on authority of Nirvana-tantra).

(2) Name of a Siva sect resorting to Vamacara.

Saktisamgama, Tara,

 One of the broad divisions of Tantric ácáras, as distinct from yoya.

Àgneya-varna

Letters connected with the element of fire. These are from Ya to Ksa in order.

Sáradátilaka (Rághavabhatta's comm. on it),

Ajapá

A form of effortless meditation. The sounds ham and sah, arising automatically due to the movement of breath, constitute this mantra. This automatic formation of the hamsa-mantra takes place in múladhára, anáhata and ájñacakras. Ajápa is twofold, secret and open. The latter is sub-divided into two categories, sound and sight. Gheranda, Sáradátilaka, XIV.91 (Rághavabhatta's comm. on it).

Àjñá-cakra

The nerve-plexus between the eyebrows. Looking like a two-petalled white lotus, it is symbolised by the letters Ha and Ksa.

Satcakranirñpana,

Aksamálá

A rosary of beasds made of Rudraksa, crystals, etc.

Akula

Siva aspect of Sakti.

Tantráloka,

Ali

Spirituous liquor used in Tantric worship.

Àlidha

A posture in which the right leg is stretched forward and the left is slightly bent.

Àmnáya

Zone of Tantric culture, five or six in number.

Kulárnava, Saktisamgama, Sundari, V.

Anáhata

- (1) A nerve-plexus (Cakra) in the region of the heart, supposed to look like a twelve-petalled red lotus.
- (2) Name of a particular sound without anything being stuck.

Anavasthollasa

The last stage of spiritual progress, according to some Tantric schools.

Parasuráma-kalpasútra,

Ànavi diksá

A form of Tantric initiation in which mantra, arcana, asana nyasá, dhyana and various articles of worship are required. It is of various kinds, e.g., Spársň, Vaciki, etc.

Sáradátilaka, V. 127-40 (Raghavabhatta's comm. on it), Pranatosini,

Anganyása

A method of feeling the limbs in a Tantric rite. It is of five or six kinds. The centres are heart, head, protective symbol, eyes and intestine.

Nilatantra.

Antardasara

Internal body of mystic diagrams. Inner shade of the flames of Cakras, called Bindu, Trikona and Astakona. Manifest ray of the Navatikona or Navayonicakra consisting of nine triangles.

Kámakalávilasa, 30; Nityásoda-sikarnava,

Antaryága

Mental worship in which the Pancatattvas are conceived as abstract and not tangible things

Mahanirvana,

Gautamiya Tantra,

Gándharva Tantra.

Anukalpa

Substitute, e.g., coconut water for wine.

Àpyáyana

Processing of a mantra.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasara,

Àrmbha-ullása

First stage of spiritual attainment.

Paras'uràmakalpa,

Ardhaparyanka

A sitting posture in which both the legs are on the same pedestal, one knee being bent and the other raised.

Arka: Jāána-sakti,

Asamprajňáta Samádhi

See Samádhi.

Àsana

Posture as an accessory of yoga.

Astadala-padma

Eight-petalled lotus conceived as a symbol in the making of Cakras inside and outside human body as also in diagrams. The petals are stated to; contain the letters KA, CA, TA, TA, PA, YA, SA, LA.

Astamátrká

Eight Mother-goddesses supposed to reside in the Visnurekháof Bhúpura-yantra, Nityásodasi-karnava, I.

169-71.

Astapása

Eight bonds of human existence, viz., ghrná (hatred), lajja (shame), bhaya (fear), sanka (apprehension), jugupsa (aversion or reproach), kula (pedigree), sila (conduct), jati, (birth or caste).

Astasiddhi

See Siddhi

Astra: Same as Astrabija (q.v).

Artrabija

Syllabe Phat.

Nilatantra,

Asvakrántá

The vast tract of land extending from the Vindhya hills to the great ocean. In the Mahásiddhasáratantra, its western boundary is the river Karatoya in Dinajpur district of West Bengal, and the eastern boundary is in Yavadvipa or Java. According to some authorities it extends from above hill to the west, comprising Persia, Egypt and Rhodesia.

It is one of the three tracts into which India is divided in certain Tantras.

Avadhúta

dvaita-jñána-vihino yah sarva-bhúta-hìte ratah / tyakta-varnásramah santah papa-lesa-paranmukhah // avalipta na kutrapi dhutapapah sadaiva hi / avadhutah sa vijneyas-tatkrte cina-sadhanam //
A Tántric devotee of a very high i

(1) A Tántric devotee of a very high order.

An Avadhúta of the highest grade is called Kulavadhuta. Avadhutas are divided into two classes: Householders and recluses.

Kulárnava, Pránatosini, Mahánirvána

(2) Name of a nerve.

Avadhútì

The central nerve, according to Buddhists, corresponding to Susumna of Hindu Tantra.

Àvaranadevatá

Also called Yogini, presiding over nine Cakras called Prakata, Guptas, etc., which are different from the wellknown Satcakras.

Aityasodasikarnava, (Setubandha Comm.).

Avidyá

False knowledge, nescience, Moha.

Avìra

Tántric disciple belonging to the probationary stages of arambha, taruna, yauvana and praudha, Parasurama-kalpa-sutram, (Ramesvara's Comm.).

Àvrtì

Avarana, Veil of delusion.

Avyakta

Unmanifested. Denotes Prakrti (q.v.).

Bahirdasara

External appearance of the mystic diagrams intended to represent five gross and five subtle elements. These elements are symbolised by ten letters beginning with Ka.

The ten triangles, representing the theme, are supposed to be presided over by ten goddesses, called Kulakaulayogini.

Nityásodasikárnava,

Bánalinga

A form of Siva-phallus, supposed to reside in the triangle of Anahata-cakra,

Bhairava

Paramasiva

Bhairavi Cakra

A ritual in which Pañcatattvas are used. In it, males and females participate and indulge in drinking and sexual intercourse.

Mahánirvána,

Kaulávali-nirnaya,

Kularnava,

Bhairavì Mudrá

It is that condition when everything is withdrawn into a person in the shape of his soul.

Bháratì

Same as Visuddha (q.v.).

Bhumisparsa

A mudra (q.v.) in which the palm of the right hand is turned inward, and the fingers outstretched with the tips of fingers touching the ground.

Bhúpura

A four-cornered figure with four doors and a triangle within.

Gandharva Tantra,

Nityásodasikárnava,

Bhútápsárana

Warding off evil spirits and disturbances by means of mantras.

Saradatilaka.

(Rághava's comm.).

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára,

Bhátasuddhi

Part of a rite in which the five bhútas or elements of the body are purified.

Nilatantra.

Bija

- Mystic syllables like Hrim, Hum, etc.
- (2) Semen.
- (3) Cidatman.

Bindu

- (1) One dot represents undivided manifestation of Siva.
- (2) Double dot (Visarga) represents Sakti.
- (3) According to Saivas, an evolute of Nada.
- (4) In Kashmir-Saivism, one of the ten Vidyá-tattavas.
- (5) Prána. According to some, it has three forms, Prakas'a (static), Vimarsa (kinetic) and Prakas'a-Vimarsa (combination of both).

Sáradátilaka,

Tantráloka,

Prapañcasára,

Kámakalávilása, (Cidvalli).

Brahmadvára

The passage through which Kundalini (q.v.) moves.

Brahmagranthi

One of the three knots in the Múládhára-cakra. Nilatantra

Brahmándi

Same as Susumná (q.v.).

Brahmapura: Human body.

Brahmarandhra

An aperture in the crown of the head, through which the soul or vital breath is supposed to escape on its leaving the body.

Brahmavartman: Same as Susumna (q.v.).

Cakra

(a) The six mystical circles or nerve-plexuses, supposed to exist within the body from the lower extremity of the spinal cord up to the head. The circles in the ascending order are: Múládhára, Svádhisthána, Manipúra, Anáhata, Visuddha, Àjñá.

The Sahasrára-padma (1000-petalled lotus) is supposed to be located within the crown of the head.

- (b) Designation of an assembly of Tantric devotees for certain rites, e.g., Bhairavi Cakra.
- (c) Endless rotation of Sakti.
- (d) Yantra or mystic diagram, e.g., Trikonacakra, Astakonacakra. See Satcakranirupana.

Cakrapújá

A Tantric worship in the company of some tantric devotees under the leadership of the Guru.

Nilatantra,

Cakrabheda

Literally, penetration of Cakras. Manifestation or activation which is necessary for keeping the body fit and for attainment of Siddhis. A Tántric Sádhaná.

Caksusi diksa

A form of initiation in which the Guru initiates his disciple by a more glance.

Kularnava,

Saradatilaka,

(Rághava's comm.).

Candra

A Vámacári sect.

Saktisamgama, Tárá,

Candrakalá

Symbol of cresent moon supposed to exist on the crown of the goodess, from which nectar is believed to exude.

Mahánirvána.

Candranadi

Another name of Ida (q.v.), supposed to represent Sakti in the form of the moon.

Satcakranirúpana, I.

Caramálá

Rosary of Rudráksa, crystal, etc., for Japa or muttering the name of god.

Krsnanánda's

Tantrasára,

Caturdasara

A diagram constituted by 14 triangles each of which is presided over by a goddess. Such goddesses are called Sampradá-ya-yoginis. It is believed to lead to the acquisition of Isitva, one of the Siddhis (q.v.).

Nityásodasikárnava,

Gandharvatantra,

Caturvimsatitattva

24 fundamental things also recognised in Tantra. These are five gross elements, five subtle elements, five sensory organs, five motor organs, mind, intellect., egotism, primordial substance (prakrti).

Catuskútá

A particular arrangement of letters for use in the cult of Srividya.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára.

Chotiká

Syllable Phat.

Cinácára

A mode of Kaulacara.

Táratantra.

Citrini

Name of a nerve, also called Brahma-nádi. Sometimes regarded as one of the three constituents of Susumná (q.v.); often identified with Susumna.

Pránatosinì.

Cúdácakra

A kind of spiritual exercise for Vira type of devotees. It involves Laya-yoga (q.v.).

Dákinì

A class of minor deities associated with Parvati, Chinna-masta, etc. Supposed to be the presiding deity of Múládhára.

Pránatosini

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára.

Satcakranirúpana,

Daksinácára

Orthodox way of spiritual attainment without Pañcamakára in conformity with Veda, Smrti and Purána. Vedácara, Vaisnavácára and Saivácára are included in it

Daksinamárga

Same as Daksinácára (q.v.).

Daksinasrotatantra

Tantras belonging to the southern current, viz., Yoginijala, Yoginihrdaya, Mantra-malini, Aghoresì, Kriághoresvarì, Lakinìkalpa, Marici, Mahámarici.

Dámara

It denotes uproar, affray, riot, the bustle and confusion of festivity or strife. It stands for a class of Tantras, stated to have been narrated by Siva.

Dasasamskára

See Samskára.

Dasamahávidyá

Ten tántric goddesses: Káli, Tárá, Sodasi, Bhuvanesvari, Bhairavi, Chinnamasta, Dhumavati, Vagalá, Mátangi, Kamalá. Pránatosini,

Dehasádhana

Same as Káyasádhana (q.v.)

Devacakra

A kind of Cakra ritual.

Devicakra

Same as Cakra (q.v.).

Devyastra

The mystic syllables HRIM PHAT

Nilatantra, II. 7.

Dháranayantra

A diagram usually used as an amulet. It is drawn on a leaf, and dedicated to a deity.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára.

Saktisamgama, Tara, L.

Dháraní

Protective spell used by Tantric Buddhists.

Dhátusakti

Designation of Dákini, Rákini, etc., the presiding deities of Cakras.

Dhyána

Meditation on a deity.

Basic element in Tantric Sadhána and an accessory of Yoga.

Digambara

- A naked order of Avadhutas (q.v.) having the quality of Siva.
- (2) A Vámácári sect.

Pranatosini, VII. 7,

Saundaryalahari, (Laksmi comm.).

Dìksá

Initiation, According to Visvasara Tantra, it is of four kinds, viz., Kriyavati, Kalavati, Varnamayi and vedhamayi. Pranatosini, According to Kularnava it is sevenfold, viz., Kriya, Varna, Kala, Sparsa, Vak, Drk and Manasa. Each of these is subdivided.

According to Rudrayamala, it is of three forms, viz., Anavi, Sakti and Sambhavi.

Pránatosini,

Other types are Karma, Pancayatana and Ekamantra, etc.

Dipana

Processing of mantra.

Krsnánanda's Tantrásara,

Divya-bháva

The highest spiritual attainment of a Tantric devotee.

Divyacakra

Name of a Cakra ritual, in which the Pañcatattvas are used, meant for those who have made considerable spiritual progress.

Mahánirvána,

Divyamudrá

Same as Khecarimudra (q.v.).

Divyatattva

A category of Pañcatattva (q.v.).

Divyaugha

A line of succession of Tantric gurus.

Syamarahasya,

(quotation from Bhavacudamani).

Drk-diksá

Same as Caksusi diksá (q.v.).

Duti

Same as Lata (q.v.).

Dútiyága

Ritual union of a Tantric devotee with his female partner. Her organ is fancied as sacrificial fire into which the semen of the male partner, conceived as clarified butter, is offered. Parasuráma-kalpasútra,

Ţ

Ekalinga

A field or a place in which (up to five krosas) there is but one Sivalinga; designation of a Sivalinga at such a place.

Nilatantra,

Gajakrántá

Same as Asvakrántá (q.v.).

Gandhástaka

Eight fragrant substances taken together and used as substitute for wine of three kinds — Sakti-sambandhi, Sivasambandhi and Visnusambandhi.

Sáradátilaka.

Gauda Sampradaya

A sect of Tantric devotees belonging to eastern India and following Vámácára. It depends entirely on Pancatattva (q.v.), and advocates the unity of devatá, guru and mantra as manifestation of the energy of the Great Goddess.

Purascaryárnava,

Saktisamgama, Sundarì,

Gauripatta

Base upholding Sivalinga. Looking like the female organ, it is also called yoni.

Gáyatri

The basic mantra of an initiated dviia.

Grhávadhúta

An Avadhúta (q.v.) leading the life of a householder. Pránatosini,

Gunaspanda

Qualities of Sattva, etc.

Guptatarayogini

Designation of goddesses who are Avaranadevatas (q.v.).

Gandharvantantra,

Gupti

Keeping the mantra secret.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára,

Gurubija

Letters H, S, KH, M, L, V, R, Y, Um.

Hádividyá, Hádimata

Vidya, denoting knowledge, mantra or deity, emanating from Kamaraja bija.

A school named after Ha, the symbol of Siva, and influential in Kerala and Kashmir.

Saktisamgama, Tara,

Hákini

Presiding deity of the Ajna-cakra (q.v.), conceived as six-faced and white in complexion.

Satcakranirupana.

Hamsa

- Supreme Soul, Brahman.
- (2) A symbolic mantra involving inhalation (ham) and exhalation (sa) of breath. Same as Ajapá (q.v.). Regarded as Para-mamantra. It is of two kinds, Vyakta (manifest) and Gupta (hidden).

Ham is the symbol of Bindu (Purusa, Male Principle of Creation, and Sah of Visarga) (Prakrti, Female Principle).

Satcakranirupana,

(Observations of Kalicarana).

Hamsa-mantra

Also called Ajapá-mantra. Name of the mantra, consisting of ham and sah symbolism, for the awakening of Kundalini (q.v.).

Hamsapitha

Region of Hamsa, supposed to exist within Sahasaras (q.v.). Indicated by A-KA-THA triangle, and marked by letters HA-LA-KSA. In it, the devotee should meditate on guru as identical with Siva.

Padukapancaka, I

(Kalicarana's Comm.).

Hárdhakalá

- Sex-organ drawn on mystic diagrams. Also known as Hamsapada or Yoni.
- (2) Wave of bliss resulting from Siva-Sakti union.

Hathayoga

A kind of forced yoga or abstract meditation performed with great self-mortification, such as standing on one leg. In it, the mind is forced to withdraw from external objects.

In the Yogasikhopanisad (I-33), it is described as the unity of the sun (Ha) and the moon (Tha).

In the Hathayoga-pradipika (I.10), it is regarded as the source of all kinds of Yoga.

Havisya

Food prepared with rice that has been dried in the sun.

Nilatantra,

Homa

A rite in which oblation is poured into fire. It is of various kinds, e.g., Sthúla (gross), Súksma (subtle), Pará (transcedental), Báhya (external), Àntara (internal), Nigraha (harmful act), Saumya (beneficial), etc.

Mátrkábheda.

Tantrarája,

Krsnananda's Tantrasara,

Sáradátilaka,

Tárábhakti-sudharnava,

Nilatantra,

Hotri diksá

A type of initiation in which the guru performs homa for purifying the six quarters.

Sáradátilaka,

Hsien (Chinese)

Immortality

Hrtlekha

The Bija Hrim.

Nilatantra,

ldá

One of the fourteen main nerves. Symbol of the moon, it is on the left of the spinal cord. Supposed to be of white colour.

Satcakranirúpana, I.

lddhi (from Rddhi)

Miraculous power stated in Buddhist texts like the Brahma-jála-sutta,

Cullavagga,

11m (Arabic)

According to Sufis, knowledge gathered from experience.

Indrayoni

A nerve-plexus between Visuddha and Àjñá Cakras.

Indu: Kriyasakti.

Indubijá

Dram.

Nilatantra,

Isitva

A kind of Siddhi (q.v).

Istamantra

The mantra taught by one's guru.

Itaralinga

A form of Siva-linga.

Saradatilaka, IV.

Japa

Muttering or repeating a mantra, or the name of a deity.

Kulárnava,

Saktisamgama, Tárá,

Gandharvantantra,

It is of three kinds, viz., Vyakta (expressed), Avyakta (unexpressed), Suksma (subtle), also called, respectively, Vacika, Upámšu and Mánasa.

Játakusuma

Menstrual blood of a woman.

Nilatantra,

Játasútaka

Newely born child. Mantra is conceived during initiation as a newely born child.

Saktisamgama, Tárá,

Jìvana

Processing a mantra.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára.

Jivanmukti

Liberation in life.

Jivasakti

Name of Cundálini, the vital energy within the body. Tantraraja Tantra,

Jñánahoma

Homa performed in internal worship.

Pránatosinì,

(Quotation from Nityatantra).

Jyesthá

A destructive Sakti by which Sivahood of extremely enlightened persons is obstructed.

Jyotirdhyána

Meditation on the Self, believed to reside in Kundalini (g.v.) in the form of light. Also called Tejodhyána.

Kádaimata

A principal Tantric school with Ka as its symbol. Texts in glorification of Mahatripurasundari, especially those describing the mode of Her worship, etc., are known chiefly under two divisions, one of which is Madhumatimata or Kádimáta.

The Tantraraja, Matrkarnava, Tripurarnava and Yoginihrdaya come under this class.

Saktisamgama, Tara

Do, Kali,

Kádivídyá (Kádimata)

Knowledge deriving its name from the initial letter of Vágshava Bija (q.v.).

Sáradátilaka.

Kahádimata

One of the three main Tantric doctrines.

Saktisamgama, Tara,

Kákinì

(1) Presiding deity of the Anáhata Cakra (q.v.), conceived as yellow and residing within a twelve-petalled red lotus.

Satcakranirúpana,

(2) KA is called Kákini Bija.

Kalá

(1) Aspect of the Great Mother Goddess, symbolically represented by varna or letter. 38 Kalás are supposed to have emanated from the three groups of letters, called Saumya, Saura and Agneya.

Prapañcasára.

Saradatilaka.

According to another tradition, 50 Kalás emanated from the five constituents of Pranava (Omkára), viz., A, U, MA, Bindu, Náda.

Sáradátilaka.

(2) Prakrti, Sakti, Máyá.

Sáradátilaka,

Prapañcasára,

- Letters from A to KSA.
- (4) Náda.

Kálacakra

A minor nerve-cycle above Visuddha Cakra (q.v.) but below the Ajñácakra (q.v.). Also known as Lalanácakra, it denotes the wheel of time and the chief deity of Tántric Buddhists' Kálacakrayána.

Kalá (Vatì) diksá

A form of initiation in which the guru locates the five Kalás, called Nivrtti, Pratisthá, Vidhyá, Sánti and Santyatita in different parts of the body of the disciple and anoints him.

Kálámúkha

A Vámáchari Saiva sect, much similar of Kápálikas. They are known to have dwelt in South India.

Kalámúrti

Framentary form of the figure of Sakti.

Sakti of any deity is divided into sixteen parts (Kalá).

Garland of Letters,

Kalányása

Perception of the deity in different parts of the body of the female partner of the devotee.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára,

Kálibija

The syllable Krim.

Kálimata

Texts in glorification of Mahatripurasundari, especially those describing the mode of her worship, etc., are known chiefly under two divisions, one of which is the Kálimata or Malinimata.

Kámabija

The syllables Klim, Krom, etc.

Kámakalá

- (1) Sexual art.
- (2) Imagined as Mahátripurasundari, it is of the nature of Cit (consciousness), Ananda (bliss), icchá (will), Jnana (knowledge) and Kriya (action). It is supposed to be in a triangle within the Candramandala of the Sahasrarapadma (q.v.). It is regarded as a combination of the three Bindus of Ravi, Agni and Soma. In some Tantras, Kama is the equilibrium of Prakása (static) and Vimarsa (dynamic) Sakti of Siva.

Nityásodasikárnava,

(Setubandha comm.).

Satcakranirúpana,

(Observations of Kálicarana).

Kámakálavilása, Cidvallì (comm.).

Kámamandira

House for union with Sakti.

Nilatantra,

Kámarajabija

Designation of letters HA, SA, KA, HA, LA, HRAN, each symbolising an aspect of Sakti or Vidyá.

Sáradátilaka,

Kámesibija or Kámabija

The syllable Klim or Klhrim.

Kámika

Name of the seat for Kámya Japa or the muttering of a mantra name of a deity for a special purpose. Made of the skin of deer, tiger or ram or cane.

Purascaryárnava,

Kañcuka: Pása, evil, Máyá, etc.

Kápáfika

An extremist Saiva resorting to the cult of Sakti, and drinking wine in human skulls.

Saktisamgama, Káli,

Karamálá

The hand used as a rosary.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára.

Nilatantra,

Karamkini Mudrá

According to those, who have attained perfect knowledge, it is a mental state when the body of the five elements rests in the great firmament, and the world appears to be like a corpse and devoid of all actions.

Karana

In astronomy it is the name given to half of a tithi.

Kárana

Wine used in Tántric rituals. The word means caused. Such wine is supposed to be the cause of knowledge of dharma, artha, káma, and moksa. Pránatosini...

Karanyása

Part of a rite in which the hand is placed in a particular position. In it, the fingers and the reverse of the palm are used to invoke deities in the form of letters.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára,

Nilatantra,

Kartari

A mantra of two letters.

Tantraraja,

Kartriká

A kind of Astra (q.v.) or weapon which is seen in the land of Adya-Sakti.

Nilatantra.

Kásmira Sampradáya

Tantric devotees of Kashmir. Saktisamgama, Sundari, Purascaryárnava,

Kaula

One who performs Tantric rites with five Makáras, i.e., follows Kulacara.

Kaulas are divided into many sects, e.g., Kapalika, Ksapanaka, Digambara.

Nilatantra,

Kaulamárga

A way of spiritual exercise (ácára) confined within the spiritual lineage of a particular group (Kula).

In it, the devotee worships with the Pancamakaras.

It is of two kinds, wet and dry.

Kaulamárga-rahasya,

Nirvána-tantra.

Kularnava.

Rudrayámala, Uttara,

Kaulajnananirnaya,

Mahanirvana,

Kaulavalinirnaya,

Pranatosini,

Krsnananda's Tantrasára,

Warning against abuse of Kaulamárga, Parasuráma-Kalpa-sutra,

Mahánirvána,

Kaulika

Same as Kaula (w. v.).

One who follows the Kula or Kaula mode of Sadhaná, Nirvánatantra, XI. Kulárnava,

Nilatantra,

Kaulika Sakti

Same as Khecari Sakti (q.v.).

Kaulika Siddhi

Moksa according to Kulamata of Kashair Saivism. Paratrimsika.

Kaulini

Same as Kundalini (q.v.).

Kavaca

Prayer with certain mystic syllables supposed to protect the devotee as an armour protects the body. Protective spell.

Syámárahasya,

Kerala Sampradáya

A Tántric secft whose followers are spread over 19 countries from Àryávarta to the sea.

Saktisamgama, Káli,

Siddhánta-samgraha.

Puras'caryarnava,

Khapuspa

Menstrual blood.

Khecari Mudrá

A Yogic posture which leads to spiritual attainment, and enables a person to overcome disease and death. By this *mudr*á movement on the outskirts of the sky of Cit becomes possible.

Gheranda.

Khecari Sakti

Kha means Brahman.

The power, which moves as the kinetic energy of Brahman, is called Khecari.

Though one, it is manifested in various forms.

Paratrimsika,

Kilaka

Literally a small stick,

It is a kind of Nyása (q.v.).

Nilatantra.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára,

Kosa

Sheath. The Human body is supposed to consist of the five sheaths as follows:

Annamaya, Pránamaya, Manomaya, Vijñánamaya, Ànandamaya.

Kramadáksá

A type of initiation to the mantras of Kali, Tárá and Tripurasundari, meant for certain special kinds of devotees.

Pránatosini,

Kramamata

A Tántric system of Kashmir, dealt with in Abhinavagupta's Kramakeli and Krama-stotra. It is twofold according as it relates to Saivism and Sáktism.

Tantráloka,

Kriyásakti

Three kinds of mystic power, viz., Maojavitva (having speed like mind), Kámarúpitva (assuming forms at will), Vikaranadha-rmitva (infinite mental power to consume and transmit).

Kriyavati diksá

A form of initiation in which many rituals are performed, and the guru santifies the disciple's body; inculcates his own consciousness into the disciple.

Pránatosinì,

Kriyáyoga

A kind of yogic exercise, Sakti-samgama, Sundari,

Krodhani Mudrá

According to those, who have achieved success in mantra, it means that which is contained in the 24 tattvas.

Krtyá

An evil goddess supposed to cause harm. Nilatantra.

Kula

- (1) Family and the mode of worship handed down by the tradition of the family.
- (2) Tantric rite obtaining in a particular region with reference to a particular deity.
- (3) The Sastra which expounds the group of objects including the knower, the known and the knowledge or the worshipper and the object of worship.
- (4) Body.
- (5) Adháracakra. Constituents of the word are Ku (earth) and liyate (merges).
- (6) Spiritual lineage from Paramasiva to one's own guru. Lalitásahasranáma. I (Saubhágyabháskara comm.).

Kulabhakta

One who is devoted to a Kaulika Sádhaka.

Nilatantra,

Kulacakra

A kind of Tántric rite in which several devotees assemble.

Nilatantra,

Kulácára

Same as Kaulamárga (q.v.).

Nilátantra.

Kuladravya

Same as Pañcatattva (q.v.).

Kaulávalinirnaya,

Nilatantra,

Kuladrsti

Sight of Kuladevi; Kaulika's.

Sight of the desired deity.

Nilatantra.

Kulajana

A devotee of the Kaulika class.

Nilatantra,

Kulajña

One who knows Kulacara.

Nilatantra.

Kulajñána

Knowledge of Kulamárga.

Parasurama-kalpasutra,

(Ramesvara's comm.).

Kulakaulayogini

Presiding goddesses of Cakras of the Bahir-dasára (q.v.) class.

Gandharvatantra.

Kulakundalinì

Same as Kundalini (q.v.).

Kulamárga

Same as Kaulamarga (q.v.)

Kulamrta

Nectar flowing down from the Candramandala within the head when Kundalini (q.v.) penetrates the six Cakras.

Kulanáyaka

Best among the Kaulika Sadhakas, Heree Siva.

Nilatantra.

Kulapadma

Six-petalled lotus within Sahasrára (q.v.).

Kulapatha

The passage through which Kundalini (q.v.) ascends. Saundaryalahari,

Kulaoújana

Worship of the desired deity of a Kaula (q.v.).

Nilatantra,

Kulapuspa

Flowers like *Rakta-jav*á (red China rose); here it means the menstrual blood of a woman.

Nilatantra,

Kularasa

Sváyambhu-kusuma or menstrual blood of a woman.

Nilatantra.

Kulasamketa

Technical mysteries of Kaulamárga (q.v.), e.g., Kramasanketa, Pújá-sanketa, Mantra-sanketa, etc.

Niruttara,

Kulárnava,

Parasuráma-kalpasútra

(Ramesvara's comm.).

Kulasástra

Kulárnava, Kaulávali-nirnaya, etc.

Nilatantra,

Kulasundra

Great Kaulika (q.v.),

Nilatantra,

Kulasundari

Feminine gender of Kulasundara (q.v.).

Kulatattva

Same as Kuladravya.

Kulávadhúta

See Avadhuta.

Kulávidyá

The mantra used by a Kaulika.

Nilatantra,

Kuła-vrksa

The following trees regarded as sacred by Kaulas:

Slesmátaka, Karañjaka, Nimba, Asvattha, Kadamba, Plaksa. Vata. Udumbara. Cinca.

Nilatantra.

Kulayosit

Also called Kaulini, it is the name of Kundalini (q.v.). Saundaryalahari (Laksmidhara's comm.).

Kulluká

Designation of a mantra recited before japa after the worship of Mahávidyá.

Nilatantra,

Kulodaka

Semen.

Nilatantra.

Kumbhaka

A kind of *Pr*á*n*á*y*á*ma* in which the breath is held up. Nilatantra.

Kundagolodbhava

'Menstrual blood, regarded as sacred for the Goddess. Kundodbhava is the blood of a married woman, and Golod-bhava is of a widow'.

N. N. Bhattacharya.

Hist. of Tantric Religion, p.443. The word Kunda, occurring in the Manusmrti, iii. 156, 158, 178, and Yájñavalkya-smrti, l. 10, 222, 224, has been interpreted as an illegitimate issue of a Brahmin woman, whose husband is alive, by another Bráhmin male.

The word Goia, occuring in Manusmrti, III. 156, 174 and Yajñavalkya-smrti, I. 10, 222, has been taken to denote an offspring of the clandestine union of a Brahmin widow and a Brahmin male.

Kundalini

The serpent, symbol of vital energy, supposed to coil around the Múladhára (q.v.).

Tantrarája,

Gheranda.

Satcakranirúpana,

Saradátilaka,

Nilatantra,

Pránatosinì,

Niátrkábheda,

Rudrayamála, Uttara

Saundarya-lahari, (Laksmi-dhara).

Kúrcabija

The mystic syllable HUM.

Kurukullá

Letters, A, E.

Laghimá

See Siddhi.

Lákini

Presiding deity of Manipura Cakra (q.v.).

Laksmi

Name of bija Srim.

Nilatantra,

Lalanácakra

See Kálacakra, Lambikagra.

Lambikágra

A nerve-circle located above the Visuddha and below the Àjñá. Also called Lalana or Kalacakra.

Latá

Sakti or woman with whom one should associate or perform Maithuna as part of a Tántric Pújá.

Also called Dúti.

Latásádhana

Ritual involving.

Pañcamakara.

Layabhogánga-vidhána

Process of separating Malas or Pásas (q.v.) from the body. A part of Smárti diksá (q.v.).

Sáradátilaka,

Purascaryárnava,

Layasiddhiyoga-samádhi

State of perfect bliss. In it, the devotee acquires spiritual power, and enjoys the pleasure like sexual enjoyment leading to the realisation of identity with the Supreme Being.

Gheranda.

Layayoga

A form of Hathayoga which destroys all mundane desires and leads to eternal bliss by bringing about the merger of one's mind in the Supreme Being.

Lelìhána Mudrá

According to Sáktas, that which licks everything again and again.

Linga

Male organ worshipped as Siva-phallus.

Lingapuspa

The flower, called Raktakaravi, used as a substitute for sexual union.

Parasurama-kalpasútra,

Lopámudrá

Mantras, relating to *Srividy*á, consisting of 15 symbolic letters.

Krsnananda's Tantrasara,

Madhyamá

A kind of sound midway between Pasyanti (q.v.) and Vaikhari (q.v.). Connected with intellect. Represents equilibrium of Para and Pasyanti.

Prapañcasára,

Kámakalávilása,

Lalitásahasranáma,

(Saubhágyabháskara).

Madhyamasrota Tantra

Tantras belonging to the middle current, viz., Vijaya, Nihsvása, Sváyambhuva, Vátula, Virabhadra, Raurava, Makuta and Viresa.

Mahácakra

A Cakra ritual in which one's mother, sister, daughter, daughter-in-law and wife are to be worshipped as Pañcasakti.

Nirtuttara.

Mahácinácára, Mahácinakrama

Same as Cinácára (q.v.).

Maháhrada

Pure Cidatman.

Mahámámsa

Flesh of the following creatures, regarded as sacred for offering to the deity:

man, cow, ram, horse, buffalo, boar, goat, deer.

Syámárahasya,

Krsnánanda's Tantrasara.

Mahamudra

A form of posture.

Gheranda.

- (2) Woman in general.
- (3) Female organ.

Mahápasu

An uninitiated person.

Nirtuttara,

Mahásámrájya-diksá

A form of initiation which is an essential prerequisite of Kaula Sádhana.

Mahásetu

Designation of a mantra recited before japa after the worship of a Mahávidyá.

Higher from of Setu (q.v.).

Nilatantra,

Mahávidyá

Ten Tántric goddesses whose names vary in different texts. They are usually called Kali, Tara, Sodasi, Bhuvanesvari, Bhairavì, Chinnamastá, Dhumavári, Vagalá, Mátangì, Kamalá, Pránatosini,

It is interesting to note that the term also denotes Kevalánvayihetu, i.e., a purely positive probans in logic or Nyáyasástra (Vide Mahavidya-vidambana of Vádindra, ed. M. R. Telang, Baroda, 1920).

* Mahimá

A kind of siddhi (q.v.).

Maithuna

Sexual intercourse, considered as one of the five

Makáras.

Mahánirvána,

Pránatosini.

Mala

Fetters causing rebirth and suffering of worldly existence. Threefold, viz., Anava, Kárma and Mayiya.

Málinimata

Same as Kálimata (q.v.).

Mánasa diksá

Same as Manodiksa (q.v.),

Mánavaugha

A line or succession of Tantric gurus.

Mandaia

(1) A period of 49 days.

Nilatantra.

(2) A ritual Cakra in which the devotees, sitting with their female partners around the leader, indulge in the enjoyment of five Makaras.

Kaulávalinirnava,

Mahánirvána.

(3) Diagrams like Sarvato-bhadra, used in Tantric rituals.

Manipura

A Cakra near the navel region, also called Nábhicakra. Conceived as a 10-petalled lotus of blue colour, each petal containing a letter. Within the lotus is conceived a triangle of the colour of the rising sun. The outer sides of the triangle are represented by three svastika symbols.

Satcakra-nirúpana,

Nilatantra..

Manodiksá

A form of initiation merely by the guru's thought and mental action.

Kularnava,

Manonmana

Transcendental bliss coming out as a result of bhaktiyogasamádhi.

Gheranda,

Mantra

Generally incantation relating to a male deity.

Mantra-adhva

Blood to be purified for Sádhana. Adhva denotes a constituent of the body which is of six kinds, viz., Bhuvana (cerebral organ), Mantra (blood and flesh), Pada and Varna (muscles and vein), Dhátu and Reta (bones and fluids). Saradátilaka, V. 24-25 (Rághavabhatta).

Mantracaitanya

Consciousness, inherent in mantra, to be roused by exertion.

Pránatosini.

Gandharvatantra,

Mantrayána

Name of Tántric Buddhism.

Mántrì diksá

A form of initiation in which the guru at first purifies himself and then conscerates his disciple.

Sárádátilaka,

Pránatosini,

Manu

Mantra.

Nilatantra.

Márana

The rite for killing.

Marifat

According to Sufis, knowledge obtained through divinegrace.

Mátr : Yogiñi, Sakti Kalá.

Mátrká: See Astamátrká.

Mátrkányása

Perception of Mátrkás (q.v.) in the forms of letters in different parts of the body. Twofold — Antarmátrká-nyása and Bahirmátrká-nyása,

Krsnánanda's Tantrasara,

Mátrkárna

Mátrkávarna; letter of the alphabet.

Nálatantra,

Mátrkávarna

See Mátrkárna,

Máyá

Name of Bija Hrim.

Nilatantra

Máyábija

Hrim.

Nálatantra,

Máyiya mala : Such a feeling as 'l', 'Mine'.

Meru

The bead in a rosary, through which the ends of the thread pass before being tied in a knot. Nilatantra.

Mudrá

(i) Derived from root Mud, it literally means that which gives delight. Poses of hand or fingers used in worship, e.g., Matsya, Kúrma, Samkha, etc.

The Gheranda-samhita mentions 20 Mudrás.

- (ii) Posture of the body at the time of yoga., e.g., Asviini Mudrá.
- (iii) One of the five Makáras essential in Tantric Sádhana. It means fried or parched cereals, e.g., Yogiñi-tantra, or geometrical figures.
- (iv) In Buddhist Tantra it denotes woman. The Pragñopáya and Sekoddesatika (p. 56) take to mean a woman with whom a Tántric Yogin associates.

Mudrávirya

Condition of Khecari (q.v.).

Mukta-trivenì

Same as Àjñá (q.v.).

Múla

- (1) Also called Múládhára (q.v.).
- (2) Mulamantra (q.v.).

Múlacakra

Same as Muladhara (q.v.),

Milatantra,

Múládhára

The lowest of the six Cakaras (q.v.), supposed to be at the lowest extremity of the spinal cord where Kundalini (q.v.) is supposed to reside.

Satcakranirúpana,

Múlamantra

The main or basic mantra imparted by one's spiritual preceptor at the time of initiation.

Múlavidyá

Same as Múlamantra (q.v.).

Nilatantra,

Mursid

Guru or spiritual preceptor according to Sufis.

Nábhipadma

Same as Manipura (q.v.).

Satcakranirúpana,

Náda

Sound. First vibration of Pará Sakti expressing itself in creation. Manifestation of the consciousness of the Supreme Being, revealed in sound.

Sáradátilaka, 1. 6ff.

Satcakranirúpana,

(Kálicarana).

Prapancasara.

Nádi

Artery or vein in the body. Supposed to be 72,000 in number. Of these, 72 are the major ones, of which again the three most important are Ida, *Pingal*á, and *Susumn*á.

Pránatosini,

Nakuli

На.

Nakulisa

Ham.

Napumsaka mantra

A mantra which is neither male (i.e., meant for deities) nor female (i.e., meant for female deities).

Saradátilaka,

Napumsaka Varna

Letters B and L.

Sáradátilaka,

(Raghavabbatta).

Narácamudrá

A hand-pose in which the tip of the right thumb is joined with the top mark of the right forefinger and then stretched out while other fingers are bent low.

Nati

Dancing woman, Goddess (Sakti) supposed to dance in delight at the performance of rituals.

Niruttara,

Navacakra

Nine Cakaras, of which five belonging to Sakti and pointing upward and four to Siva pointing downward, constituting the Sriyantra which is looked upon as the bodies of Siva and Sakti, joined together.

Saundaryalahai, IX.

(Laksmidhara's comm.).

Nityásodasikárnava,

(Setubandha comm.).

Navanáda

(1) Nine Nádas or special kinds of sound, supposed to reveal the nature of Kundalini.

Kámakalávilása,

(Cidvalli).

(2) Letters A, initial letter of each Varga, Ya, Sa and Ksa. Saundaryalahari, (Laksmidhara).

Nimesa Sakti

Will power, by which the concept of Sadasiva is characterised in Kashmir Saivism.

Isvarapratyabhijñá,

Nirvikalpa Samádhi

Blissful state of mind in which the distinction of the knower, knowledge and object of knowledge is obliterated.

Nyása

 A part of Tantric ritual, in which dities are placed (i.e., felt) on different limbs of the body.

There are various types of Nyasa, e.g., Mätrkányása (feeling Mátrkás), Pitha-nyasa (feeling the holy resorts of Sakti), etc.

(2) Subtle identification with Cakras.

Krsnananda's Tantrasara,

Nilatantra,

Odra-puspa

Javá flower.

Also called Japá. China rose.

Odra was the name of modern Orissa. Perhaps, it was believed that this flower originally used to grow in Orissa.

Padmásana

A sitting posture, in which the right foot is placed on the left thigh and vice versa.

Pañcabandhana

Five fetters as a result of Avidyá (false knowledge).

Pañcabhuta

Five gross elements, viz., Earth, Water, Fire, Wind and Ether.

Pancagavya

Five products of the cow, viz., cowdung, cow's urine, milk, curd and ghee.

Nilatantra,

Pañcakalá

Five aspects of Sakti, viz., Nivrtti, Pratisthá, Vidya, Santi and Santyatita.

Sáradátilaka,

Pañcakañcuka

Five impure material elements, viz., Kalá, Niyati, Kála, Vidyá and Rága, which causes bondage of different kinds.

Pañcakles'a

Five letters, viz., Avidyá, (false knoweldge), Asmitá (egotism), Raga (attachment), Dvesa (hatred) and Abhinives'a (adherence).

Paácakriyá or Paácakrtya

Five actions of Sakti, viz.,

Srsti (Creation),

Sthiti (Preservation),

Samhára (Destruction),

Troidhána (Disappearance),

Anugráha (Favour),

Tantraloka,

Pañcamakára

Five things, whose names begin with the letters Ma, necessary for Tántric Sádhana. These are Madya, Mámsa, Matsya, Mudra, Maithuna.

Pañcámnáya

Five Amnáyas (zones) well-known for Tántric culture.

Pañcamundi

An ásana (seat), for Tántric Sadhana, made with the severed heads of two Candálas, one jackal, one monkey and one snake.

Paácarátra

Originally used, in Satapatha Bráhmana, as an adjective of Purusamedha, it later came to be used as an independent word meaning a sacrifice to be performed in five successive nights. The word has been interpreted in as many as eight different ways. (Vide K. D. Bharadvaj's paper 'Pañcarátra' in Aruna Bháratí, A. N. Jani Fel. Vol., pp. 59 ff.) The Pañcarátra deals with philosophy, meditation, temple architecture and iconography and some matters peculiar to the sect.

Pañca Sakti

Mother, sister, daughter, daughter-in-law and preceptor's wife worshipped as five great Sáktis.

Niruttara,

Pañca Preta

Brahmá, Visnu, Rudra, Isa, Sadásiva, forming the seat of Goddess, together called Panca Preta.

Pañcatanmátra

Five subtle elements, viz., Sabda, Sparsa, Rúpa, Rasa, Gandha, corresponding, respectively, to Sky or Ether, Wind, Fire, Water and Earth.

Pańcánga-suddhi

Fivefold purification, viz., átma-suddhi, sthána-suddhi, mantra-suddhi, dravya-suddhi and deva-suddhi.

Pañcatattva

Same as Pañcamakára (q.v.).

Pañcáyatani dìksá

Initiation into the cults of Siva, Sakti, Visnu, Súrya and Ganesa.

Krsnananda's tantrasára,

Pañcopácra

Five articles for worship, viz., gandha (sandal-paste and other fragrant substances), puspa (flower), dhúpa (incense), dipa (lamp), naivedya (food offering), Purascaryarnava,

Parakiyá

Wife of another person, sometimes taken by a devotee as his partner.

Paralinga

- (1) Imaginary male organ in terms of which the Bindu or vacuum in the Sahasrara triangle in conceived.
- (2) A type of Sivalinga.

Paramahamsa

A devotee who has succeeded in Hamsa-mantra.

Paramakula

Same as Àjñá (q.v.).

Paramesthi Guru

The fourth spiritual ancestor of the guru.

Mahánirvána.

Páramitá

Perfection, transcendental virtue. Generally six or ten; viz., Dama, Sila, Ksanti, Virya, Dhyana, Prajna. To these are, sometimes, added Salya, Adhi-sthana, Maitra, Upeksa.

Paramudra

Subtle form of Mudra.

Tantraraja,

Parapara Guru

Third spiritual ancestor of the guru.

Mahánirvána,

Pará Sakti

- (1) Supreme Goddess. An aspect of Mother Goddess.
- (2) Female partner of the tantric Sádhaka. Sáradátilaka, 1.7 (Comm.). Nityá-sádasikárnava, Mahanirvána, V. 2.

Kulárnava,

Satcakranirápana, L

(Kálicarana).

Pása

Same as Mala (q.v.).

Pasu

Anu. Jiva. That which is tied by pásas or fetters.

A man in whom animal propensities are predominant.

Regarded as the weakest type of human beings.

A low class of Tántric devotees.

Twofold — sabhava (influenced by knowledge) and vibháva (with a mark left by knowledge). A pasu may again be diksita (initiated) or adiksita (uninitiated).

Pásupatasútra,

Kaulávalinirnaya,

Nilatantra, VIII.

Pasubháva

The attitude of a Pasu (q.v.).

Rudrayamala, Uttara,

Pasucakra

A kind of Cakra ritual.

Niruttara.

Pasu Sástra

Tantras other than those belonging to the Kaula group.

Pasvácára

General name of Vedácára, Vaisnavácára, Saivácara and Daksinácára.

Pasyanti

Belonging to the region of the navel, it is the second stage of the development of sound within the body. Prapañcasára.

Paustika

A rite designed to cause prosperity.

Nilatantra, XII. 26.

Pindabrahmánda-márga

Passage of the ascent of Kundalini (q.v.).

Piñgalá

One of the three principal arteries — rising from Múládhára and reaching the right nostril.

Possesses the characteristics of the Sun, it is also called Súryanádi.

Sáradátilaka.

(Comm. of Rághava).

Satcakranirúpana I (Sammohana Tantra quoted in Kalicarana's comm.).

Pir (Persian)

Guru or spiritual preceptor, according to Sufis.

Pranava

The Vedic syllable Om.

Pránáyáma

Lit, the expansion of breath; a breathing exercise.

It is of three kinds, viz.,

Púraka (inhalation),

Kumbhaka (holding the breath),

Recaka (exhalation),

Nilatantra,

Pranatosini,

Pratyáhára

Yogic process of withdrawing the senses from their contact with external objects.

Pratyalidha

A sitting posture in which the shooter has the left knee advanced and the right leg slightly bent and retracted.

Nilatantra,

Prthvibija

The letters LA.

Púraka

A process of pranayama (q.v.).

Pútha

A holy place in which a limb of the severed body of Sati (Siva's consort) is supposed to have fallen.

Nilatantra.

Pitha means a place where a devotee of high order used to live or seat on which such a devotee attained Siddhi. Generally 51 Pithas are recognised. Of these, quite a few are in Bengal or in neighboring areas.

Pithanyása

See Nyása.

Pithasakti

Collective name of goddesses lcchá, Jñána, etc., each representing an aspect of Sakti.

Syamarahasya,

Pradhána-tattva

Equilibrium of the felling of joy or Sorrow.

Prákámya

A kind of Siddhi (q.v.).

Prakrti

- (1) Sakti, one's female partner in a Tántric rite.
- (2) Female Principle of creation.
- (3) The Supreme Sakti according to the Sáktas. Nilatantra,

Purascarana

A Tántric rite designed to cause the potency of a mantra. It generally consists of ten parts, viz., japa, homa, tarpana, abhiseka, aghamarsana, súryárghya, jaipana, pranáma, pújá, bráhma-nabhojana.

In it, the person concerned has to take havisyánna (q.v.) and pañcagavya (q.v.).

Kaulávalinirnaya,

Nilatantra,

It may consists of five parts also, viz., Japa, Homa, Tarpana, Abhiseka, Bráhmanabhojana.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára,

Púrnábhiseka

Highest form of Abhiseka (q.v.).

Purusa-Prakrti

Male and Female Principles of creation.

Puryastaka

Five kinds, viz.,

Para (flowers made of jewels, etc.),

Apara (made with cut pieces of variegated cloth),

Uttama (obtained from plants),

Madhyama (fruits),

Adama (leaves, water).

Putita

A mantra in between two Bijas, one in the beginning, another at the end.

Nìlatantra,

Putikrta

Same as putita (q.v.).

Rahasya Yogini

Eight presiding deities of the Astakona Cakra (q.v.).

Gandharva,

Rajácakra

A form of Cakra worship.

In it, mother, sister, daughter, dauther-in-law and preceptor's wife are looked upon as Saktis.

Niruttara,

Rajani

A special type of woman recommended for being worshipped in Tantric rituals.

Niruttara-tantra,

Rájayoga

A form of yoga in which the mind automatically merges in Brahman.

Pránatosini,

Gheranda,

Rambhá

Designation of a woman of any of the four castes endowed with noble traits of character, eminently fit for Tantric rites.

Niruttara-tantra.

Rathakrántá

A vast stretch of land from the Vindhyas to Mahácina including Nepal. China was called Mahacina in the medieval period..

Recaka

A process of pranayama (q.v.).

Rìktá

Name of a tithi of evil influence.

Nilatantra,

Rudragranthi

A knot obstructing the ascent of Kundalini (q.v.).

Lalitásahasranáma,

(Saubhágyabháskara comm.).

Sádi Vidyá

A branch of knowledge, so named after the initial letter of the Sakti Bija.

Sahaja

- (1) The easiest and most natural way of spiritual exercise.
- (2) Ultimate reality according to the Sahajiyas or adherents of the Sahaja doctrine.

Sahasrára

Thousand-petalled multicoloured lotus supposed to exist in Brahmarandhra (q.v.).

Satcakranirúpana,

Nilatantra,

Salvácára

A form of Daksinácára emphasising the cult of Siva-Sakti.

Vedic mode, eightfold Yogic practices and animal sacrifice; these are the characteristics of this Acára. Pranatosini.

Sákinì

Presiding Goddess of the Visuddha Cakra (q.v.).

Satcakranirupana,

(Kálicarana's comm.).

Sákteyì

A kind of Diksá (q.v.).

Sáktì

- (1) The Bija Hrim.
- (2) The female partner of a Tantric Sádhaka.

Of three kinds, viz.,

Svakiya (own wife),

Parakiyá (another man's wife),

Sadharani (prostitute).

- (3) Female principle of creation.
- (4) A limb of Mantra.

Kulárnava.

Niruttara.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasara,

Gandharva,

Pránatosini,

Nilatantra,

Srividyaratnasutra,

(Dipika comm.).

Saktibija

HRIM.

Sakticakra

Name of the five Sakti triangles in Sriyantra (q.v.).

Saundaryalahari

(Laksmidhara's comm. citing Bhairavayámala).

Sakticálani

A mudrá causing great success. By it the breath is held up by Kumbhaka. The wind so confined pushes Kundaliniupward.

Sáktidiksá

Initiation based on pure knowledge, in which there is no external rite. Sáradátilaka, (Rághavabhatta).

Pránatosini

Sakti-káranaváda

The doctrine that Sakti is both the efficient and material cause of the universe.

Nityásodasikárnava,

Saktisamgama, Tárá,

Saundaryalahari,

Kaulamargarahasya,

Lalitásahasranáma.

Saktipata

Touch of the lustre of Siva, by which even a man of no strength can realise Cit.

Saktitrikona

Sakti triangles conceived as existing in different parts of the body, the three lines of a triangle symbolising any set of three theories, and the angles supposed to be presided over by different goddesses.

Saktivarna

Vowels.

Sáradátilaka.

Samádhi

An accessory of Yoga. State of intense concentration and bliss, in which the world of sense disappears. It is of two kinds, Savikalpa (q.v.) and Nirvikala (q.v.) which are also called Samprajñáta and Asamprajñáta, respectively.

Gheranda,

Gandharva, Kulárnava,

Sámarasya

Equilibrium of Siva and Sakti (of Upaya and *Prajī*nā in Buddhism), often conceived in sexual terms, the complete comprehension of which leads to the perception of non-duality.

Samaya (Pújá)

Worship in and by the mind.

Samáyácára

A mode of the Srividyá cult.

Saundaryalahari,

(Laksmidhara's comm.),

(Saubhágyabháskara comm.).

Parasuráma-kalpasútra, (Ramesvara's comm.).

Sámbhavi diksá

A form of initiation of a superior level done by the mere touch, glance or will of the guru.

Related to the secret cult of Kamesvari. Nityotsava,

Samháracakra

A part of

Navacakra (q.v.).

Nityasodasikarnava, I.

Sampradayayogini

See under Caturdasára.

Samprajñáta Samadhi

See Samádhi,

Samputa

The desired mantra, recited before and after the name of the Sádhya (i.e., one against whom any of the six malevolent rites is performed).

Nilatantra,

Samskára

Sacrament, usually 10, prescribed for the three upper classes of the Bráhmanical society.

Sánta-Sakti

A form of Sakti containing will (icchá), knowledge (Jñána) and action (kriyá).

Sántibìja

Svaha.

Sastra

Syallable Phat.

Satcakrabheda

Same as Cakrabheda (q.v.).

Satcakramarga

Same as Pindabrahmandamarga (q.v.).

Satkarma

Six acts calculated to do harm to an enemy:

Márana (killing),

Stambhana (causing paralysis),

Uccátana (exzplusion), Vasikarana (bringing others under control),

Vidvesana (creating bad blood) and Sánti (pacification).

Nilatantra.

Savikalpa Samádhi

A state of perfect concentration and bliss in which a feeling of difference exists between the knower and the objects of knowledge.

Sávitri

Mantra called

Gayatri (q.v.).

Nilatantra.

Setu

- (1) Designation of a mantra recited before japa after the worship of Mahávidyá. So called as it is believed to be like a bridge for crossing the ocean of suffering. According to Tantrasára, Omkára proceeds a mantra. According to Pranatosini, Pranava (Omkára) is called Setu for Brahmanas and Ksatriyas. For valsyas Phat is Setu.
- (2) Fourteen vowels followed by anusvára and náda.

Purascaryarnava,

Nilatantra,

Siddha Vidyá

Same as Mahávidyá (q.v.).

Siddhántácárá

A form of Vámácara, designed for devotees of the Vira type.

It lays greater stress on antar-yaga than on external rites.

Its adherents worship Visnu by day while resorting to panmcamakara at night.

Siddhaugha

A line of succession of Tantric gurus.

Siddhi

Mystical power. Supposed to be eight, viz., Animá (assuming a very small form), Laghimá (making the body very light), Prápti (power of obtaining anything), Prakamya (irresistible will), Mahima (increasing one's size at will), Isitva (superiority, greatness), Vasitva (bringing others under control), Kamavasayta (suppression of passion).

Sometimes the number is given as ten, with the addition of Bhuktisiddhi. Icchásiddhi.

Sivabija

Name of mercury.

Siva Cakra

The four Siva triangles making the Sriyantra (q.v.).

Binducakra, Astadala-padma, Bhúpura, etc., are also called Sivacakra.

Saundaryalahari,

(Laksmidhara's comm.).

Smárti diksá

Initiation of the disciple in his absence. In it, the preceptor mentally renders the neophyte free from the threefold impurity of ánava, kárma and máyiya types, and elevates his soul so as to enable it to be united with the Supreme Being.

Saradátilaka,

(Rághava's comm.).

Sodasadala-padma

Sixteen-petalled lotus a, each petal of which has a vowel representing a Mátrká.

Sodasopacára

Sixteen articles for worship; ásana, svágata, pádya, árghya, ácamaniya, madhuparka, puna-racamaniya, snaniya, vasana, bhúsana, gandha, puspa, dhúpa, dipa, naivedya, vandana.

Mahanirvána.

Sodhányása

A form of Nyása in which the deities are individualy perceived in the body. It has six methods.

Tárábhakti-sudhárnáva,

Saradatilaka,

Krsnananda's Tantrasara.

Sonitapuspa

Same as Játakusuma (q.v.).

Nilatantra,

Sparsa (Sparsani) díksá

Initiation of the disciple by the touch of the guru.

Kularnava.

Sáradátilaka, (Rághava's comm.).

Sricakra

See Sriyantra.

Srikula

A prominent Tantric school of which texts like Tripurárahasya, Prapañcasara, Saradatilaka, etc., belong.

Srividyá

- (1) Mahávidyá.
- (2) A particular mantra.

Sriyantra

The most important diagram relating to the cult of Srividya.

Also called Sricakra and Tripuracakra.

It contains 9 triangles or Yonis, five connected with Sakti and four with Siva, the former turned upward and the latter downward.

Nityásodasikárnava,

Kamakalavilasa,

Saundaryalahari, (Laksmidhara's comm.).

Srota

See Daksina Srota.

Madhyama Srota.

Srsticakra

One-third of Sriyantra, representing the creative aspect of Sakti.

Setubandha comm. on Nityásodasikarnava.

Stambhana

One of the six Tántric rites, rendering the efforts of the enemy abortive or causing paralysis to his body.

Sáradátilaka

Sthúladeha

Gross budy.

Sthúla Dhyána

Meditation based on an object like the image of the deity concerned.

Strivarna

Long vowels.

Sáradátilaka,

(comm.).

Suddhatattva

Paramasiva.

Suddhavidyá

Knowledge of Tattvas.

That which imparts the knowledge of Siva.

Suddhi

Designation of meat, fish, *Mudr*á, fruits, roots, etc., offered while offering wine to the goddess.

Páñcamakáras (q.v.) are also called Suddhi.

Sáksmadeha

Subtle body.

Sulabija

The mystic sound Phat.

Súnyatá

Void or vacuity conceived in terms of the Female Principle.

Súrya Nádi

Another name of Pingalá (q.v.).

Susumná

A Nádi supposed to exist between Ida and Pingala.

Also called Brahmanadi or Bhahmavartman.

It extends from Múládhára (q.v.) to Brahmarandhra (q.v.).

Through it Kundalini ascends.

Svacchanda

Independent, Siva.

Svádhisthána

Name of a Cakra within the body, supposed to be located above Múládhára. It looks like a six-petalled lotus

Satcakranirúpana,

(Laksmidhara's comm.).

Nìlatantra.

Satcakranirupana,

Nilatantra,

Svakiyá

Wife of the devotee as his partner in Sádhana.

Svapuspa

The first menstrual blood of a married woman, sacred to Goddess

Svayambhu Kusuma

Menstrual blood of a maiden.

Nilatantra.

Tádana

Processing of a mantra. Each letter of it is recited 10 or 100 times.

Tádana is done also by writing the letters and sprinkling water of sandal wood over them.

Krsnánanda's Tantrasára,

Taijasa Varna

Agneya Varna, i.e., I, I, Ai, Kha, Cha, Tha, Tha, Pha, Ra, Ksa; stated to have originated from tejas (heat).

Tamas

Atmábhimána.

Tanmátra

Subtle elements, viz., sabda, sparsa, rúpa, rasa, gandha.

Taoism

A school of Chinese thought according to which Mother Goddess represents Yin, i.e., the Female Principle underlying creation.

Tárábija

The mystic syllable Kram.

Tárásodhá

A kind of Nyása used in the worship of Tárá. Nilatantra,

Farigat

According to Sufis, the way of understanding the relation between God and the individual and with the material world.

Tárinimata

Same as Khadimata (q.v.).

Tarpana

- Libation of water of deities, sages and forefathers.
 Krsnánanda's Tantrasára,
 Mahánirvána,
- (2) A method of processing mantras.

 Tantrasára, op. cit.,

 Nilatantra,

Tattvacakra

Same as Divyacakra (q.v.).

Tattvamudra

The top of the ring-finger joined with the tip of the right thumb.

Nilatantra,

Tejodhyaná

Same as Jyotirdhyana (q.v.).

Tha

An imitative sound, as if a metallic jar rolling down steps.

Trailokyamohana-cakra

A form of Sricakra or Sriyantra (q.v.),

Trikona

- (1) The mystic syllable em.
- (2) Triangle, also called yoni, necessary in Tantric worship. Pará Sakti or Vák is at the middle point. Three arms represents three forms of sound (Pasyanti, Madhyamá, Vaikhari), or, according to some Tantras, Icchá (desire), Jñána (knowledge) and Kriya (action). Three Bijas, three Saktis, three goddesses, three Pithas, and other concepts involving a triad. Kundalini is called Mahátrikona.

Kamakalavilasa,

Nityásodasikárnava (Setubandha comm.).

Parasuráma-kalpasútra,

Gandharva-tantra,

Tantrarája-tantra,

Trilinga

Three phallus-symbols of Siva, viz., Bána, Hara, Para.

Tripitha

Collective name of Kámarúpa, Púrnagiri and Jalandhara Pithas.

Kámakalávilasa,

Tripuracakra

Same as Sricakra or Sriyantra (q.v.).

Tripurasundarimata

Name of Hadimata (q.v.).

Saktisamgama,

Turiya

- (1) Highest state.
- (2) A very high state. A field of knowledge, which is also known as turiya, is supposed to be contained in the Sahasrara Cakra,

Uccátana

One of the six malevolent rites, by which the expulsion or mental agitation of the enemy is ensured.

Sáradátilaka.

Unmana, Unamani

Sixth stage in spiritualn exercise. The devotee, in this stage, experiences great joy in which his sens-organs stop functioning.

Upacára

Articles for worship. These may range from five to sixty-four.

Sáradátilaka, (Rághava's comm.).

Krsnananda's Tantrasára.

Mahánirvana,

Upádánakárana

Material cause.

Ullása

Stages of Tántric Sádhana, viz., Àrambha, Taruna, Yauvana, Praudha, Praudhánta, Unmana, Anavastha.

Parasurama-kalpasútra,

Upámsu

Japa in a very low voice so that it cannot be heared.

Uttarácára

The way shown by Vedic injunction and the Guru who is Jiyanmukta.

Uttarakaula

A sect of Kaula worshippers.

Saundaryalahari,

Uttaramnaya

Northern zone of Tantra culture.

Vacika (Vak) diksa

The form of initiation with mantra.

Saradatilaka, (Raghava's comm.).

Vadhubija

STRIM.

Nilatantra,

Vagbháva

It denotes bija, and is also the name of a triangle.

Vahnijaya

Svaha.

Nilatantra,

Váikhari

One of the four kinds of sounds. Carried by the wind inside the body, it is articulated in the throat as sentences.

Saradatilaka, 1.1 (Comm.).

Nityasodasikarnava, (Setubandha comm.).

Vaisnavácára

A way of Sádhana to be followed by a Tantric devotee.

Nilatantra.

Vajra

- (1) Thunderbolt, a weapon often found in the hands of the Tantric Buddhist images.
- (2) Diamond.

Vajrapuspa

Diamond flower, valuable flower, the blossom of sesamum. Nilatantra.

Vajrayana

A form of Tantric Buddhism.

Vák-diksá

See Váciki Diksá.

Vámácára

A Tántric way of Sádhana. Followers of it resort to Pñaca-makára.

Saktisamgama, Tárá I. 90 ff. Sakti is worshipped as a personification of Siva's wife. According to some, a rite in which a woman, who is placed on the left of the man, plays an important part, or is a crooked way practised secretly. Váma is of kinds, Madhyama in which all the five Makáras are resorted to, and Uttama in which Madya, Maithuna and Mudrá are used.

Vámamárga

Sáme as Vámácára (q.v.).

Varna (mayi) Dìksá

The form of initiation in which the spirit of letters is infused into the different parts of the disciple's body. Såradåtilaka.

Vasikarana

One of the six black rites by which a person is brought under control.

Saradatilaka,

Vedácára

A mode of Sádhana. In it Vedic way is followed.

Pranatosini,

Vedha (mayi) díksá

Same as Manodiksá (q.v.).

Vesyá

For technical meaning in Tantra, see our observations in connexion with position of women in Tantra

Vibháva

See under Pasu.

Videvasana

A black rite by which animosity is created between persons.

Vidyá

- (1) True knowledge.
- (2) Female deity.
- (3) Mantra relating to a female deity.
- (4) Female partner of a Tantric Sádhaka.Nilatantra,

Vilása

A principal Tantric school.

Vira

A Tántric Sádhaka of the second grade, who has advanced mental faculties, and follows

Virácára (q.v.).

Kulàrnava,

Rudrayámala, Uttara,

Parasuràma-kalpasútra,

Nirvántantra,

Kámákhyátantra,

Niruttara.

Saktisamgama, Sundari,

Pránatosini.

Virabhava

A particular attitude of a Tántric Sádhaka.

Viracakra

A cakra ritual in which five Saktis, viz., mother (Bhumindra-kanyá), daughter (Rajakisuta), sister (Svapaci), daughter-in-law (Kapáli) and wife (Yogini) are worshipped.

Niruttara,

Virácára

A way of Sádhana to be followed by a Tántric devotee.

Vìrasádhana

Sádhana practised by a Vira type of devotee.

Virásana

Sitting posture in which one rests the body on the heels.

Visarga

It represents both Pará and Apará aspects of the Sakti.

Also called Kaulika Sakti, it is the Female Principle (sah) as complementary to the Male Principle (ham), Bindu. Tantra-loka, III. 120 ff., Satcakrani-rúpana, XL-III (Kálicarana's comm. quoting Praspañcasára).

Visnugranthi

A knot in the Anáhata Cakra (q.v.) which Kundalini has to penetrate in its ascent.

Visnukrántá

The tract of land extending from the Vindhyas to Cattala (Chittangong in Bangladesh) or, according to some, to Java in the Far East.

Visuddha

One of the six Cakras, above the Anahata (q.v.) in the region of the neck. Supposed to look like a sixteen-petalled lotus. Seat of Sarasvati.

Satcakranirúpana,

Vitarka

Reflection like this - I am Siva Himself.

Vyápaka-nyása

See Vyápaka-trava.

Nilatantra,

Vyápakatraya

A kind of Nyása. The three are:

- 1. Touching the head and foot with the hand.
- 2. From foot to head.
- From head to foot.

Nilatantra,

Yámala

Literally meaning 'pair', 'couple'.

Yang

The Male Principle in Chinese philosophy.

Yantra

Diagram, geometrical figure, painted with various colours at the time of worship. The worshipper imagines that the deity, being worshipped for the time being, resides in the diagram. Diagrams differ according to the forms of the deities worshipped. Variously interpreted as instrument, the body and abode of a deity, amulet, mental faculty, pure consciousness, doctrinal, niceties, microcosm of human body, etc.

Gandharva,

Kularnava.

Saktisamgama, Tara,.

Krsnananda's Tantrasara,

Saundaryalahari.

Nilatantra,

Yantrapuspa

Flowers like Javá, Aparajita, Rakrakarvira, etc.

Nilatantra,

Yaugi diksá

A form of initiation. In it, the guru, in a subtle form, enters the body of his disciple and identifies his personality with that of the disciple.

Sáradátilaka,

Yin

The Female Principle in Chinese philosophy.

Yogini

- A class of goddesses, 64 in number, believed to be manifestations of the eight M\u00e4trk\u00e1s.
- (2) Female partner of the Sádhaka.
- (3) Goddesses presiding over the Cakras.
- (4) Name of a Tantric school.
- (5) A class of Female ascetics spreading knowledge among the masses.
- (6) Medicine woman.
- (7) Woman possessed by the goddess.

Yoni

- Diagram resembling the female organ.
 Nilatantra,
- (2) Fourfold Sakti, viz., Ambá, Jyesthá, Raudri, Vámá.
- (3) Female organ. See Gauri-pitha.

Yonimudra

- A finger-pose looking like the female organ.
- (2) A posture of the body, in which the devotee fixes his anus on his left heel, tongue on the palate, and eyes on the tip of the nose. It is supposed to rouse Kundalini,

Pranatosini,

Sàradátilaka, (Quotation from Bhútasuddhi-tantra). Nìlatantra.

Yonipuspa

Black Aparájitá flower symboling sexual intercourse. Purasuráma-kalpasútra,

Yoniyugma

A triangle with its apex upward intersecting a triangle with its apex downward.

Nilatantra,

Yuganaddha

Male Principle united with Female Principle, a motif often represented in Tántric Buddhist art.

The non-dual state of unity of Súnyatá and Karuná. Sádhanamálá,